Ludicrous description of the Origin or Cause of

WIT AND COURAGE.

Henry 4th, Part 2d, Scene 3d.

A good Sherris-sack hath a twofold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and crudy vapours which inviron it: makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable ſhapes; which delivered o'er to the voice, (the tongue) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The ſecond property of your excellent Sherris is,— the warming of the blood; which, before cold and ſettled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of puſillanimity and cowardice: but the Sherris warms it, and makes it courſe from the inwards to the parts extreme—It illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the reſt of this little kingdom, man, to arm: and then the vital commoners, and inland petty ſpirits, muſter me all to their captain, the Heart; who, great, and puff'd up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of Sherris: So that ſkill in the weapon is nothing, without Sack; for that ſets it a-work: and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil; 'till Sack commences it, and ſets it in act and uſe. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his Father, he hath, like lean, ſteril, and bare land, manured, huſbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good ſtore, of fertile Sherris; that he is become very hot, and valiant—If I had a thouſand ſons, the firſt human principle I would teach them, ſhould be,—to forſwear thin potations, and addict themſelves to Sack."

HENRY 4th, Part 2d, Scene 3d, Act 4th.

Our immortal Poet has always repreſented Falſtaff fond of drinking; and here, like all ſenſualiſts, the knight reaſons in its favor, from his affection for it.

COURAGE; Hotſpur.

Worceſter.——" This abſence of your father's draws a curtain,
That ſhows the ignorant a kind of fear,
Before, not dreamt of.

Hotſpur.—You ſtrain too far.
I, rather, of his abſence make this uſe;
It lends a luſtre, and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprize,
Than if the Earl were here: for men muſt think,
If we, without his help, can make a head,
To puſh againſt the Kingdom; with his help,
We ſhall o'er turn it topſy-turvy down.—
Yet, all goes well; yet, all our joints are whole.

Douglas.—As heart can think: there is not ſuch a word
Spoke of in Scotland,* as this term of fear."

Firſt Part, King Henry 4th, Act 4th, Scene 1ſt.

Hotſpur's undaunted courage draws conſolation and hope, even from diſappointment and misfortune.

HEROISM.

True Magnanimity of Soul;

Prince Henry.

(Prince Henry to Worceſter.)

In both our Armies, there is many a Soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praiſe of Henry Percy: By my hopes,†—
(This preſent enterprize ſet off his head,)
I do not think—a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant, or more valiant young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may ſpeak it to my ſhame,
I have a truant been to chivalry;
And ſo, I hear, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my father's majeſty,—
I am content, that he ſhall take the odds
Of his great name and eſtimation;
And will, to ſave the blood on either ſide,
Try fortune with him in a ſingle fight—

King Henry 4th, Part 1ſt, Act 4th, Scene 1ſt.

In comparing Hotſpur's low-minded envy and lofty boaſting, (Act 4, Scene 1) with the exalted praiſe which Prince Henry voluntarily beſtows on his enemy in the foregoing noble modeſt ſpeech; we cannot but loſe ſight, of that valiant chieftain's martial deeds. The one;—however cover'd with Glory, was ſtill a

* Douglas was an Enemy—Shakſpeare an Engliſhman! This is real praiſe, when thoſe circumſtances are conſidered.

† "By my hopes"—What they were, will fully appear, in the beautiful ſoliloquy of Prince Henry, at the end of Scene 2d, Act 1ſt, and in the conference with his father, Scene 2d, Act 3d, where he tells him; that, "he will make this Northern Youth, exchange his glorious deeds, for his indignities."

rebel—the other;—offers the ſacrifice of his own life, to ſave the blood of his future ſubjects, and his father's Crown!—Shakſpeare has made his Harry, indeed a Hero! all his motives, are noble,—even his follies, are almoſt excuſed by them—To complete this fine-drawn picture, ſee Vernon's deſcription to Hotſpur of this modeſt challenge; Scene 2d, Act 5;—and Prince Henry's Soliloquy over the body of Hotſpur;—his fallen enemy, and dangerous rival; both in Fame and Crown!

The character of Prince Henry, (in ſpite of all his faults) as drawn by Shakſpeare's inimitable pen ſtands very high in our eſtimation; and we cannot reſiſt giving the cloſe of that noble ſpeech to his Father, becauſe it adds to his other (then hidden) good qualities, the exalted, and really eſtimable one of Piety—

"Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engroſs up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to ſo ſtrict account,
That he ſhall render every glory up,
Yea, even the ſlighteſt worſhip of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promiſe here:
The which, if he be pleas'd I ſhall perform,
I do beſeech your majeſty, may ſalve
The long grown wounds of my intemperance:
If not, the end of life cancels all bonds;
And I will die a hundred thouſand deaths,
Ere break the ſmalleſt parcel of this vow."

KING HENRY 4th, 1ſt part, Scene 2d, Act 3d.

LACRYMANT REX ET REGINA.

PORTRAIT OF BONAPARTE.

BY MERCIER.

Bonaparte is of the middle size, a little stooping, thin, of somewhat a delicate frame, and nervous; his hair is of a deep chesnut, falling over a large forehead; his eyes are large, dark, quick, and piercing; aquiline nose; a raised chin, like that of the Apollo Belvidere; pale complexion, hollow cheeks, a voice unrestrained and composed; he listens attentively to those who speak to him, and answers briefly; his air is solemn, but open; he has not the austerity which characterizes the head of Brutus: you may judge from his address that he is a temperate meditative man, but tenacious in the point which he has in view; that his pale complexion reddens in a decisive action; that his body is all nerve like that of the lion; that he fights in the same way; that he is indefatigable, and flies like lightning towards the enemy, before whom he never knew fear: this fire is concentred; he reserves it for great and strong explosions, and it does not imprint on his motions that restlessness, natural to men who are only ardent, and who have not the faculty of self-possession.

WESTMINSTER ELECTION.

Examination of Mr. Macklin, before the Committee on the Westminster Election, Apail 30, 1789.

I am now in the eighty-ninth year of my age; I was born two months before the current century: I came to reside in Westminster in 1720; I have always resided there since, chiefly in Covent Garden; sometimes in a house in Wyld Street.

Do you remember most of the elections for Westminster?

I remember them, but many of them, as a chaos; at ſome of them I have voted; at many, when I could, I would not vote. I did not vote at the election of Trentham and Vandeput; I had a vote, but I would not give it.

Have you converſed with old perſons who are now dead, reſpecting the right of voting for Weſtminſter?

It was a common topic over both beer and wine.

State in what deſcription of perſons you collected from thoſe perſons, the right of voting to reſide?

They were generally men of buſineſs; ſometime we had a parſon amongſt us, and ſometimes a lawyer. The converſation I mention was ſometimes in neighbourly meetings, and ſometimes men of eſtates and fortune were among us. They had great wrangling among them, and great impertinence in their wrangling, of courſe; and were I to add, partiality, I ſhould do what was right. Upon the whole I collected, that a houſekeeper had a right to vote—that was the reigning opinion of all the common-ſenſe men. It was the general opinion notwithſtanding. I underſtood no other requiſite to be neceſſary to have a right to vote, but that a man ſhould be a houſekeeper. Many objections were offered, but they were not worth a farthing. Fools and Rogues will offer reaſons worth nothing, but we marked them as there being an abſurdity in them; for we reduced our thinking on that matter to this principle; we thought the vote of a man in this country was his firſt great bleſſing in life: we would think of nothing elſe, and deſpiſed any man that ſuggeſted or offered any thing elſe; we hooted them at laſt.

The undoubted right was for a man to be a houſekeeper, and that was the only requiſite. I refuſed to vote myſelf, becauſe I thought I had not a full houſe in my poſſeſſion, and it was for a man I loved—Mr. FOX. Mr. Erſkine came to me twice, and I ſaid I would not vote, for I did not think I was above half a houſekeeper.

As far as I know, this was the right acted upon in the ſeveral elections I remember.

I never underſtood that it was neceſſary a man ſhould be reſident any particular time to give him a right to vote. I did not know it, but I always thought there ought to be. I mean that there ſhould be no impoſition; no fellow foiſted upon you

I did not underſtand that the payment of any taxes was neceſſary to conſtitute the right—that belonged to the law, and not to the vote; we talked of that, but we thought that nothing ſhould ſtop the vote. That was our principle; nothing but what ſtopped life or property; go to law for the taxes; I mean for every demand of that nature.

Did you underſtand that the payment of parochial rates had any thing to do with the right of election?

Certainly no, and for this reaſon they endeavoured to take away a man's vote by giving him ſome charity, and we inſiſted that no ſuch charity ſhould operate to take away the vote

Do you know whether the inhabitants of the Dutchy of Lancaſter were uſed to vote at elections?

I don't know; I believe they did; I heard ſo, as I recollect; it was debated over pots of porter and gills of wine, whether they had a right, and it was concluded in favour of voting.

Croſs examined.

I was always attached to the broadeſt ſyſtem of freedom.

In 1723, I firſt trod the ſtage.

Whether theſe converſations about freedom, and ſo forth, were not among the idle and profligate young perſons you have mentioned;

No; they were among old perſons.

How came you into the company of thoſe ancient perſons?

Sometimes for economy, ſometimes to get a little knowledge, and ſometime to laugh at them.

Did you laugh at them when they talked about the right of voting?

No; I paid great attention to them: when I found they ſpoke abſurdly, I did laugh at them. They were obliged to hear of the virtue of voting; we bothered them into it; we rallied them into it.

Such things were talked about, as taxes being paid; but that it did not ſtop voting. A part of us did determine ſo, and part oppoſed it; but the oppoſers were held of no value; they were held in great contempt. I was of the party eſpouſing it; I was a younker a long time in it; the party I eſpouſed are what you call ale-houſe patriots, but remember they had very good ſenſe; I mean, they were men of underſtanding.

I looked upon the receipt of charity as an evil, if it was given by a rogue to rob a man of his vote.

Were all the men that ever you knew vote, reſpectable houſekeepers?

No, they were not; there were a great many rogues among them.

I have always heard that the Dutchy had a right to vote, to the beſt of my memory the Dutchy always did vote.

MUSICAL CONVENIENCES.

[From the Times.]

WHAT a musical age we live in, Mr. Editor! Every individual is now a performer, and every family a band; and the proprietors of the music-shops, as in duty bound, omit no opportunity to increase the prevailing rage. Going over a musical warehouse the other day, the property of my ingenious friend Mr. Sonatino Humstrum, instrument-maker and music-seller, I was surprised to see so many side boards, commodes, and dressing-tables. Bless me!" said I, "friend Humstrum, how is this? Is the music trade fallen off, and do you take up the trade of a cabinet maker?"

"Good! good!" answered my friend, laughing heartily: "what! are you taken in too? Cabinet maker, indeed! that's a good joke. Why, man, these are all piano-fortes in the shape of side boards, dressing tables, and so forth, for the convenience of small rooms."

"Indeed!"

"Indeed! now can any thing be more convenient? For you must know that we in the city are so fond of giving concerts, that want of room is never considered as any objection; our music-rooms are no bigger than closets, and you would suppose the band and the audience placed by a clever packer, rather than a master of ceremonies. Now, you perceive, as people must have side-boards and dressing tables, and so forth, I have contrived to make pianos of them."

"A very pretty contrivance, indeed, Mr. Humstrum! and yet I am so much of the old fashioned way of thinking, that I should not like to be taken in so. When I go to a side board for a bottle of wine, or a plate of cakes, I should not like to be put off with an old song. Your singing side-boards may have very pretty tones, but give me the gingling of glasses, Master Humstrum."

"Ah! you are a wag, Master Squaretoes: but look here; what do you think that is?"

"I am afraid to say, lest I betray my ignorance."

"Why then I'll tell you. That is a sort of piano which may be carried about, and played in a coach."

"In a coach!—Why, who the—— wants to play in a coach? An't it enough to have our ears stunned with would-be players, but you must frighten the horses too; Played in a coach! Well, that is a good joke. What! I suppose, when one takes a long shilling's-worth you may play prestissimo inside, while the coachman is at the old-fashioned andante, or act-of-parliament trot, five miles an hour."

"But here are greater improvements yet, Master Squaretoes, which I shall announce to the world as soon as I have made a sufficient quantity for the public demand, which I know will be immense—Look here; what do you take that to be?"

"Why, according to my eyes, it should be a sofa"

"And so it is, an organized grand piano forte sofa, that is the proper name, for here you see" (lifting up the cover) "is the instrument, which may be played by a sick person."

"A sick person—O! that is a choice contrivance—What! I suppose you have got some piano pillows and musical bolsters too? Eh! for the bed ridden Cognoscenti?"

"I have some thoughts of that, too—but look you here, another instrument for the bed-room——"

"Ay! and a very proper one, and a very old one, too—one of Bramah's, an't it?"

"Something upon the same plan; but look here—"

"Astonishing! What have you got music there too? Well, I have heard of whistling to horses—"

"Hold your prophane tongue—do but listen—(plays) Tink, tink, a tink, a tink, &c &c. Can you play at all?"

"Not in that way, thank you—and so good morning, my very ingenious friend"—and good by to you Mr. Editor.

HUMPHREY SQUARETOES.

DREADFUL MURDER,

(ASSIZES—CARDIFF.)

There was only one prisoner tried at these Assizes, viz. Morgan William, charged with the wilful murder of Margaret William, his servant: the prisoner's son had been committed on the same charge, but the grand jury did not find the bill against him.

In support of the prosecution it appeared, by the examination of the evidence, that one evening in October last, the prisoner, on returning home to supper, desired the deceased to get him some bread and butter, but that not being satisfied as to the quantity, some words arose; and the deceased observed that the ghost of his brother had appeared to her, and that she had been informed by other persons that they had seen the same, he got up and laid hold of her, and shook her violently, struck her with his fist on the side, threw her on the ground, and dragged her about, and gave her some blows with his hands and knees on the thighs and lower part of her belly. While the deceased was down, she requested the witness, who was a servant of the prisoner, to assist her; but William Morgan, the son, desired him not to interfere, for the deceased had caused much mischief in the family. Soon after the woman appeared to be dead, and was lifted into a chair. Whilst she was in the chair, the prisoner appeared to be in a distraction of grief, called her his dear little Peggy, begged she would speak to him, and kissed her on the cheek. Some spirits were then put into her mouth, which the witness could not tell whether she swallowed or not, and she was afterwards taken up-stairs on the shoulders of Morgan William, the son.

A boy, fifteen years old, stated that the prisoner desired him to say that the deceased had died in a fit, if any one asked him.

The funeral took place about the usual time after a natural death, at ten o'clock in the day time, and was attended by the friends of the deceased

Richard Griffiths, Esq. the Coroner, deposed, that about ten days after the death, an inquest was demanded, and that he had directed the body to be taken up. Upon examination, there appeared many marks of violence on the thighs and lower part of the belly, evidently made by an obtuse instrument, and which he was convinced could not be the effect of natural corruption, nor the marks of any previous eruptive disease; that being satisfied as to the cause of her death, he did not open the body. He admitted, however, that there might be some causes of sudden death, which could only be discovered by a dissection of the parts. Upon being asked by the Court, what was his belief of the cause of the death of the deceased, he was decidedly of opinion that she died in consequence of the bruises she had received.

Dr. Turton, on behalf of the prisoner, said he was a physician residing at Swansea, and had sometimes seen causes of sudden death. Being desired to give his opinion as to the probability of discolourations of the skin appearing after death, in a very clear and scientific manner he informed the Court, that the circulation of the blood is the last effort of existence; that after the body is to outward appearance dead, circulation may be for some time going on, though in an imperceptible degree; that while circulation goes on, the vessels must be necessarily in action, and more or less full of blood; and that during this time, even after the appearance of dissolution, they may be broken by any violence or rough handling, and, discharging their contents, occasion discolourations of the skin. He likewise observed, that there were various internal disorders and malformations of the organs, which might be exasperated by violent agitations of the passions or feelings, so as to cause sudden death; that even the passions themselves, by an excess of exertion, might produce immediate death by spasm, rupture of an artery, &c. and that these various internal causes of sudden death can only be discovered by dissection

The learned Judge, in a speech of much energy and eloquence, recapitulated the evidence of the Jury: and the latter, after retiring a few minutes, brought in their virdict—guilty of Man-slaughter.

On the following morning the Judge passed sentence on the prisoner in the following impressive address:—

"Morgan William, you are convicted of Man-slaughter alone, upon a charge of murder, which it was the express opinion of the Court that your guilt had incurred, if the facts in evidence were believed. The Jury, therefore, must either have set up their judgment of the law against ours, or have misunderstood the law as delivered by me, or have disbelieved the witnesses, or have been misled by the effect of your character as a peaceable and good-natured man. As to their preference of their own law, in direct and wilful opposition to that of the Court, I cannot and will not believe it; in other words, I must not believe them to have abused their power and violated their duty. If I was misunderstood, it was not for want of all the efforts in my power to impress the rule and principle upon their minds, with all the accuracy and precision which I could stamp upon them. As to the discredit of the witnesses, it happens that not one of them was impeached by yourself. No witnesses, in my judicial experience, ever delivered their testimonies with more delicacy of caution: one of them, unsolicited, remarked in his evidence, that when you kicked this woman, you had no shoes on. The difference in effect was trivial, but in his mind it occurred as a feature softening the outrage.—The son of that father, a boy to whom you recommended a false account of the death in confidence—a part—and with him alone, is confirmed by the woman who laid out the deceased, and who represents that you told the same fiction to her. The evidence of the Coroner and Surgeon, Mr. Griffiths, to the cause of the death, as occasioned by your violence, must have convinced the Jury, when they found you guilty of manslaughter. They must have thought (with me) the evidence of Dr. Turton wasted and thrown away. He enlightened us with certain other causes of death, (reconcileable to similar appearances) but which had no ground for them in the fact. His evidence therefore might have been spared. As to your character, if it were true, (and I will assume its truth) it would prove that you have deceived your neighbours, and that you deserve a character the reverse of that which has been given. Had a thousand witnesses called you "peaceable and good-natured," this one transaction of pride and revenge would outweigh them all. The Jury may have thought you did not mean to kill; and therefore could not be guilty of murder; in other words, may have thought you intended cruelty and mischief in the extreme to this defenceless woman—but short of death. If the fact here supposed were true, the opinion that it was therefore no murder would have been false, and it was reprobated by me with all the energy which, armed by the law, I could give to the opinions I delivered. But could they believe the fact, that you did not mean to kill? You that said the very minute before you made your first attack, "it was in your hands to kill her!" perhaps they believe you were not master of your own reason, but were heated by passion from the moment of your first anger up to the very instant of this poor creature's death. Could they believe it? could they believe you heated, when, after such a feather of provocation, you fell upon a defenceless person who did not raise her hand against you, beat her with your fist upon her bosom and thighs, kicked her, and when she was down pressed your knees upon several parts of her body, inflicting blows and contusions even upon her waist? could they believe you were heated, when upon her affecting appeal to her fellow servant, you commanded him to desist from any help to her? could they believe that you had no deliberate hatred in your mind, when there is one mark of your penitence and remorse? your "distraction" was the horror of momentary panic, and it came too late. But it was followed up in a very short period by the command of a most wicked falsehood, in cold blood, impressed upon one of your servants—a falsehood asserted the very next morning by yourself. Hundreds have been executed for murders less aggravated than yours, less depraved, and less cruel. It is the second instance in the county of Glamorgan since my judicial intercourse with it (and I shall, after this acquittal, fear that it will not be the last) of a master's tyranny to a servant ending in death and in murder. Whatever motives of judgment or of conscience induced the Jury to deliver this verdict, it will be long felt as a deep stain upon the county, "that such guilt as yours could escape," though I impute no blame to the mercy which I cannot understand.

"You have taught your son to resemble you—He did venture to intreat that you would arrest your murdering hand—but when? —after the victim had expired. He had previously fomented your bitterness against this wretched creature, by telling that idle story of the ghost, which you resented by killing her. When he addreſſed himſelf to her, ſuppoſing her to be alive, it was in terms of unfeeling inſult; you have done, ſaid he, miſchief enough, go to bed. God of mercy! are ſervants to be thus treated? is it in this generous iſland that we can hear of ſuch tyrannies? had the Jury convicted you of the murder, not all your opulence, or the intereſt it could make, would have given to the ſhort interval between your ſentence and your death one additional hour. Who would imagine that I am talking all this time of manſlaughter, which is, in its legal acceptance, heated paſſion, or a wanton act with no peril of life, but ending, by accident unforeſeen, in death? The Jury would themſelves ignorantly tell us, that if it be not murder it is very near it, and is the moſt aggravated of manſlaughter, which of courſe would call upon us to inflict an exemplary puniſhment upon ſuch an offender. In truth it is a murder—it is nothing elſe. Not one feature of the mitigated crime appears. It is at the beſt a depraved and cruel outrage, endangering life and ending in the death for which it was calculated? but at the worſt it is alſo deliberation in cold blood, and with a decided purpoſe to kill; in both of theſe views it is equally a murder. Yet how to puniſh it under its name of manſlaughter is a difficulty. We are crippled, and yet it is no diſhonour to the law that we are—for it never ſuppoſed that a caſe like this could have the name of manſlaughter ſtamped upon it by a verdict. We cannot impriſon for the offence to which your guilt has been ſoftened by the verdit for more than one year. The additional puniſhment of burning in the hand for manſlaughter (properly underſtood), was abſurd, and cruel, or both. But in a caſe like this, one half laments that it has been ſuperſeded. Branded, however, you are ſtill to be—conſcience will inflict that penalty; the abhorance of your character in every feeling heart will pollute your path and your bed. The day will come when this murder, as I call it ſtill (and by its true name) will ſit heavily upon your ſoul, unleſs the guilt is deeply repented before that hour ſhall come. The only puniſhment wich is now to be added by the Court, inſtead of burning in the hand, is fine. As your fortune is ample, and we are deſirous to mark our ſenſe of your guilt, we ſhould make that fine exemplary as well as penal: But here again we are crippled—for the law contemplating what is manſlaughter (not a caſe like yours) has told us that it muſt be a moderate fine. Upon what principle I cannot imagine, but the Court has in general conſidered the word moderate as intending a nominal fine, and has deemed it ſatisfied in aggravated manſlaughter by a ſhilling. We have upon former occaſions broke in upon that judicial habit elſewhere, and are willing to embrace the odium of the singularity. In your case we impose 50l. as the fine, the most ample that was perhaps ever inflicted upon a manslaughter, but still if compared with your guilt, moderate in our view of it, and reconcilable to a sound exercise of discretion—so moderate that if it was not for that word we should have made it four times havier. Your sentence therefore is, that you be imprisoned for one year in the county goal, that you pay 50l. as a fine, and that you be also imprisoned until that fine is paid.'

DESCRIPTION OF AN ANCIENT CHAPEL.

BY VITRUVIOUS JUNIOR.

[From the Morning Chronicle.]

This chapel was originally built by King Stephen, and dedicated to his namesake Saint Stephen. It was afterwards new built by King Edward III. in 1347, for thirty eight persons to serve God. He also built a belfry, and put up bells. "Of these bells," says Stowe, "men fabled that their ringing soured all the drink in the town." But this do not appear to be so much of a fable as that learned antiquary supposes. Of late years it has been remarked that they have produced a very wonderful effest upon "the drink in the town."

In the Nonastican we find King Edward's charter for this chapel; and by patent, dated the 22d of his reign, he gave to it his great house in Lombard Street which belong to it, and one very large one in Thread needle Street. It is a spacious chapel, wainscoted up to the ceiling, accommodated with galleries, supported by slender iron pillars, adorned with Corinthian capitals and sconces. The SCONCING work of this building is very curious. There was formerly much Gothic work about it, but the improvements are mostly in the modern style.

It was first used as a place of worship in the present way, in the time of Edward IV. The revenues then were not less than 1085l. a year, a great sum for those days, yet literally nothing, when compared with the revenues it draws in our days, which in one year have exceeded forty millions. In order to account for this, it must be observed that every parish in the kingdom is tributary to it, and that the person who officiate here have lately demanded their tithes with great strictness. Notwithstanding this influx of wealth, they are frequently compelled to borrow money to provide for dilapidations, repairs, &c on their estates, as also to send missionaries abroad, to convert the French and other heathen nations.

The number of persons who officiate in this chapel is very great, although not above a third regularly attend. What is singular, they are mostly lay preachers, and some of them men of considerable eloquence. Their discourses are frequently very long, and desultory; for although they choose a text, like others, it is very rarely they stick to it. There are some reglar clergy appointed by them, and those of the highest rank in the church, but they always do duty in a place adjoining, which is a chapel of ease to this, where the service is performed in a more orderly and decent manner, but the congregation is much thinner. In this chapel of ease the doctrines preached at the other are frequently revised and examined, and sometimes censures have been inflicted, but they have no power over the revenues.

As to the religion of St. Stephen's chapel, much difference of opinion has prevailad. All we can say for certain is, that the prayers are the prayers of the church of England. The doctrine and discipline have varied at various periods. They contend, in general, for a standing ministry, and allow of patronage. Sometimes we hear of the Gospel, but most frequently the Law predominates, and the doctrines of the Antinomians are very much cried down. At other times faith without works is the prevailing doctrine; and hence probably it is that repentance is so seldom insisted upon, and that woful instances of apostacy are not censured as they ought. As they do not exclude the sectaries, some of the ministers are Presbyterians, but at least of late, the INDEPENDENT interest has been much discouraged. Nay, we have known instances in which Dissenters, even of moderate principles, have been threatened with the terrors of the bottomless Pit.

The livings belonging to this chapel are reckoned very good, and they are alway improveable by the incumbent, as pluralities are allowed without even the formality of a dispensation. Some, accordingly, hold three, four, or even five or six livings, and by bringing up their sons in the same persuasion, are enabled to provide for them very handsomely: and after officiating here for a number of years with zeal and assiduity, and a conscientious use of their gifts and graces, they are often translated into the chapel of ease above mentioned, where they became possessed of perpetual advowsons.

It only remains to be mentioned, that this chapel is generally very much frequented; the galleries are always very full, but in the body of the chapel it is very difficult to procure a seat. The number admitted here is restricted, and no person can apply for a pew but in the case of a vacancy, and the pews are let for a term not exceeding 7 years. Some of these pews belong to the officiating ministers, some to the preachers in the chapel of ease, and some are in the gift of certain parishes, who choose a person to sit to give them an account of what is preached. Of the latter kind, however, there are not so many as some people think there ought to be.

It has been lately proposed to repair this chapel, by pulling down the rotten parts, or what were said to be rotten; and that occasioned a schism among the preachers. The officiating ministers, however, appointed a committee from among themselves to inspect the premises, who reported that there was no immediate danger, and that it would last their time. On which the design was dropped.

These are the chief particulars I have been able to collect of the history and present state of this chapel. It may, however, be added, that the clerks only wear gowns, and a gentleman who officiates, somewhat in the manner of the moderator of the General Assembly of Scotland. He is very kind to the poor preachers, and often gives them a dinner in winter. There are no marriages celebrated here. As to external decorum, it is but little attended to, and even during the most serious parts of the service no person kneels with his own consent!

THE OLD BAILEY.

FORGERY OF A WILL.

George Richard Walker, Richard Walker (who at a former Sessions had been sentenced to transportation for receiving stolen goods), Christopher Dodds, and Thomas Rochester, were indicted for forgery, and conspiring to defraud the heir of Major Richard Hawkins, late of the Island of Guernsey; G. R. Walker being charged with forging an instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of the said Major Hawkins; the prisoners, Richard Walker and Christopher Dodds, with subscribing the same as witnesses; and the other prisoner, Rochester, with aiding and assisting in the offence.

This trial excited considerable interest, and the Cout was unusually crowded. From the statement of Mr. GURNEY, one of the Counsel for the Prosecution, and the evidence adduced, the following appeared to be the principal facts of the case:—Major Hawkins, who was a captain in the corps of Royal Engineers, went to Trinidad, in the month of April 1803; and accounts of his death were received by his relations in this country, in the month of October 1804. When he was in London, he used to reside in the house of a Mrs. Bethnal; he was unmarried, but he had a natural child. He had one brother, who had three sons, and to that brother and his family, it was proved, he had always been most affectionately attached. Soon after information of the Major's decease was received, his relations learned that his will was in the possession of G. R. Walker, and that steps were taking in Doctors' Commons to prove it in the usual form. In this will, after leaving some trifling legacies to Mrs. Bethnal and others, the deceased bequeathed all the remainder of his property to a Mrs. Elizabeth Hynde, of Devonshire, a person who had never appeared, and of whom Major Hawkins was supposed, by his relations, to have had no knowledge. Mr. G. R. Walker, whom it was believed Major Hawkins might have seen, but with whom he was by no means intimately acquainted, was appointed his sole Executor, without any interest. The language of the will was also calculated to excite suspicion. The deceased, who was proved to be a man remarkable for accuracy and regularity, was styled "Major Hawkins, of his Majesty's Royal Corps of Engineers." The fact, however, was, that he was only a Captain in the Corps, and though he consequently ranked as a Major in the army, he could not describe himself as a Major of that corps. With regard to the name of the corps, it was called "the Royal Engineers," and never "His Majesty's Royal Corps of Engineers." The will concluded with the words, "This my last act and deed," which was certainly a very singular mode of expression for a person in good health and going abroad. This instrument was dated on the 20th of March, 1803; it was pretended that it had been executed in the house of a Mr. W. Browning, in Dartmouth-street. The subscribing witnesses were, M. C. Browning, (said to be the wife of Wm. Browning,) Christopher Dodds, and Richard Walker. This Mr. W. Browning and his wife, it was pretended, had left this country, and gone to America. It appeared that persons of that name had actually lived in Dartmouth street so late as in the summer of 1804; but it was inferred, on the part of the prosecution, that these persons were the prisoner, G. R. Walker, and a woman who lived with him as his wife; and that the residuary legatee, Elizabeth Hynde, was no other than Mrs. Walker, who had subscribed the will, and in the name of M. C. Browning.

General Moss, General Twiss, Major Rowley, Sir William Green, Major Rowley, of the Royal Engineers, Lieut. Hawkins, and ſeveral other Gentlemen, who were the intimate friends and relations of the deceaſed, proved, that the ſubſcription to the will was not his hand writing; and none of them ever heard of his being acquainted with a Mrs. Browning, with any of the ſubſcribing witneſſes, or with Elizabeth Hynde, to whom he had bequeathed his fortune.

Some difficulty aroſe reſpecting the production of the proceedings in the Prerogative Court. Mr Jennings, the Gentleman who had the cuſtody of the depoſition of the ſubſcribed witneſſs, ſtated, that he was bound by his oath not to diſcloſe any of the proceedings until the publication of the will; and the Counſel for the priſoners contended that they could not be produced.

Lord ELLENBOROUGH and the other Judges were, however, of opinion, that the oath bound only to ſecrecy between the parties, and that no forms, connected with a civil cauſe, could be permitted to impede the courſe of Criminal Juſtice.

The depoſitions of Dodds and Richard Walker, and the affidavit of G. R. Walker, were then read, and the ſignatures attached to them proved to be in their hand-writing.

Mrs Elizabeth Scudder, of Dartmouth ſtreet, and Mary Woodford, of Brook ſtreet, Fitzroy-ſquare, proved, that in the courſe of the year 1804, perſons who paſſed by the names of Mr. and Mrs. Browning were their lodgers. Mr. Browning, they ſaid, was very deaf, and ſometimes uſed an ear trumpet. They were both of opinion, that the priſoner, G. R. Walker, was the man; but a Mr. Hinds, another lodger of Mrs. Woodford, ſwore poſitively to his perſon.

The principal witneſs afterwards called for the proſecution, was Robert Addington, a perſon who had acted as an agent, for G. R. Walker in the purchaſe of coals, with which he ſupplied the garriſons of Guernſey, Jerſey, Alderney, and Sark. He ſtated, that he had been applied to by the priſoner Rocheſter, to procure a ſubſcribing witneſs to the will of Major Hawkins, in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Walker. He was himſelf offered five guineas for ſigning it, and 100l. when the buſineſs ſhould be completed. He ſtated, that in July 1804 he introduced Dodds and Richard Walker to Rocheſter and G. R. Walker, and that he ſaw them ſign the will. Dodds ſigned firſt, and Richard Walker after him. Upon this occaſion, G. R. Walker gave ſome notes, rolled up, to Dodds, obſerving that he had there 10l. and that Dodds afterwards gave 3l. out of that money to Richard Walker. The will was ſigned at Walker's lodgings, in the houſe of the preceding witneſs, Mary Woodford. It appeared, that ſometime after this tranſaction, differences arose between G. R. Walker and Rochester. The witness was also dissatisfied with the conduct of Mr. Walker, and, in consequence of his suspicions respecting Major Hawkins's will, wrote to General Moss on the subject Richard Walker, he stated, suffered likewise much uneasiness of mind respecting the part he had acted, and they agreed to call upon General Moss both together. That such a meeting did take place, was confirmed by the evidence of General Moss. This intercourse with General Moss was, however, discovered by Mr Walker, who threatened to prosecute Addington for defamation; but, notwithstanding this dispute, the witness was again employed to go to Newcastle, to purchase coals. While there, he was arrested at the suit of Dodds, and remained a considerable time in prison; but being released, he returned to London. He claimed from Walker 46l. which was due to him. Walker offered to pay him, if he would sign a paper, declaring that he had injured his character by false reports respecting Major Hawkin's will. This he refused to do, and arrested Walker. On the same day, he was apprehended himself, and carried to the Thames Police Office. He acknowledged that his declarations before the Magistrate were different from what he now gave in evidence; but that, he said, was owing to agitation of mind; in the Court, he spoke the truth. The evidence of this witness occupied between three and four hours. He underwent a severe cross-examination, and Mr. Garrow drew from him some apparently contradictory statements. He at first swore that he had made no minutes, but afterwards he said he had made "extracts from his memory" of all that he knew relative to the will, which extracts he had prepared for the opinion of Counsel. He had been very active, it appeared, in pointing out what he conceived to be abuses in several branches of the public service; but he solemnly declared, in answer to pointed questions put by Mr. Garrow, that he never said "he would hang Mr. Davidson, Mr. Walker, and the whole of the Barrack Board, but that he would swear for those who paid him best."

The defence consisted in an endeavour to impeach the credibility of Addington's evidence. Several witnesses were produced, who swore that they would not believe him upon his oath.

G. R. Walker and Rochester called evidence to character.

Lord Ellenborough, in an excellent charge, recapitulated all the circumstances to the Jury, who retired, and, after remaining out about 20 minutes, brought in a verdict of Guilty against G. R. Walker and C. Dodds. Rochester and R. Walker were acquitted; the former, in consequence of a flaw in the indictment, the publication of the will having been laid in Middlesex, when it took place at Doctors Commons in the City of London.—The trial lasted from nine o'clock in the morning until ten at night. Mr GARROW was retained for the prisoners.

G. R Walker is so deaf, that he could not hear any of the evidence. A slate lay beside him at the bar, on which he occasionally wrote what appeared to be questions relative to the state of the proceedings, to which answers were written by the prisoner Dodds.

CARLETON HOUSE.

THE high pitch of excellence to which the modern style of furniture has, within these few years, arrived, being universally acknowledged, it is not to be wondered at that CARLETON HOUSE should be looked up to at the present moment as the standard of chasteness and true classical taste. When it is likewise remembered, that the whole has been under the sole and immediate direction of a gentleman of acknowledged taste and judgment, we need not be surprized at the encomiums so generally lavished upon it, and we have every reason to believe that, when finished, it will be considered as the acme of perfection. We understand that although this great undertaking is by no means complete, it is in that state of forwardness as will enable his Royal Highness in a short time to take possession.

The state rooms, about twelve in number, have undergone a thorough repair, and have all been newly furnished in the most splendid and magnificient style possible, and every way worthy of the residence of the HEIR APPARENT.

At the end of the range of rooms is a Chinese boudoir, which for taste and execution will far surpass any thing of the kind that has ever yet been attempted. The lower range of rooms are those that have undergone the greatest alteration.

These apartments, which were always heretofore considered as useless, have been entirely excavated and sub divided, so as to render them not only ornamental, but every way useful.—These are the rooms which will be immediately occupied by the Prince of Wales. They consist of his bed-chamber, which is 40 feet long. It is fitted up as the interior of a tent, immediately at the back of which is a magnificent bath, equalled by none in the kingdom. The walls are composed of real verde-antique marble, and the whole is highly polished. The flight of steps, niches, &c. are of the finest statuary.

The whole is upon a very large ſcale, and built after the model of Titus's celebrated bath at Rome. This bath is ſurrounded by different chambers for the pages, dreſſing-rooms, &c.—In front of the bed-chamber is a marble anti-room, for ſervants. Next to this is an Etruſcan-room, opening into the garden, and fitted up with books, &c. for gentlemen wiſhing to ſee his royal Highneſs. Beyond this apartment is a chamber, called the Roman-room, the walls of which are covered with purple cloth, and fitted up with book-caſes, &c. The latter may be conſidered as a kind of ſtate-room, or ſmall drawing-room. The decorations of this appartment are remarkably light and elegant, and altogether completely in the Roman ſtyle. It is generally thought to be the moſt taſteful, though not the moſt expenſive room in the houſe. This opens into the great Library, which is fitted up according to the time of King Henry VIII. the coſtume being all ſtrictly proper. The walls are hung with ſuperfine scarlet cloth, and bordered by rich maſſy gold fringe. The book caſes, tables, chairs, &c. are of black ebony, inlaid with ivory, producing altogether the richeſt and moſt comfortable effect that can well be conceived. This ſuperb range of rooms terminates with a Gothic Conſervatory, 140 feet in length.

The latter building, as far as it is advanced, bears every mark of the moſt claſſical taſte in the deſign and execution, and may be conſidered as unique. This ſuite, when the folding doors are all thrown open (for they each act upon ſympathetic hinges) will exhibit the moſt ſingularly pictureſque appearance imaginable; the diſtance from the fartheſt extremity of the prince's bed-chamber to the end of the conſervatory, being upwards of 600 feet.

LA BAGATELLE.

FROM LATE ENGLISH PAPERS.

In the late trial for CRIM. CON. (Simpson versus Ricketts,) the Judge aſked the Chambermaid of the Inn, where the offending parties had reſided, if they lived like man and wife, "Yes, my Lord," replied Betty, "they lived exactly like man and wife, for they quarreled from morning to night."

A paragraph in a Morning Paper, extolling the attractions of a rout given laſt night by a lady of faſhion, ſays—"Her ladyſhip's rout did not conſiſt of a crowded aſſemblage, met for unmeaning ceremony; but moſt happlily blended the friction of the intellect with the diſſipation of the ſenſes."—The writer, perhaps, meant to ſay, that the rout blended the friction of the senses with the dissipation of the intellect.

Many men in high life find, that, after a reſidence of three weeks in Bed-fordſhire, their wives were born in Shrews-bury.

A new married pair, in high life, when they take an airing, for the firſt three weeks, order the Sociable, but at the end of that period the Sulky.

A foreign writer obſerves, that hoſpitality is ſo rare in London, that, when a great man gives a dinner, it is circulated through all the public papers as an article of extraordinary news.

MOREAU, the new dancer from Liſbon, is an acquiſition of no ſmall importance to the light heeled corps at the Opera houſe. He withdrew gracefully from the applauſes of the houſe, ſhewing himſelf, like his nameſake, "excellent at a retreat!"

MASSENA is known in France by the title of the General with half a memory—becauſe he can recollect every livre that is owing to him, but forgets every one that he owes himſelf.

There is ſtill a kind of reciprocity between this country and France—BONAPARTE is permitted to build ſhips, and we are permitted to take them.

An Iriſh gentleman lately obſerved, that an Incloſure bill rarely failed to open a wide field of litigation.

An honeſt old German Prince being told that Bonaparte intended to confer a new title on him, exclaimed, "Good Heaven! what crime have I committed?"

Lord CASTLEREAGH's conceiving that to be a bed of roses, which Mr. Fox declared to be a bed of briars and thiſtles, is aſcribed, by a Dublin paper, to his Lordſhip having all his life been accuſtomed to lie hard.

An advertiſement in The Connecticut Mercury begins thus:— "To be let a large farm, on any terms, good, bad, or indifferent."

An apothecary near Fowye, has it written over his door—"All ſorts of dying ſtuffs ſold here."

The parade of titles, which has been ſo much inveighed againſt within theſe few years, and in no place ſo much as in France, ſeems to have revived among Frenchmen, and to have riſen to a degree certainly not exceeded in the moſt ceremonious and ariſtocratic countries in Europe.—Take, for an example, the ſtile proclaimed by the new imperial and ex-republican general Junot, addreſſed to the people of the Parma—"The governor general of the ſtates of Parma, Placentia, and Guaſtalla, General of Diviſion, Grand Officer of the empire, Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour, Grand Croſs of the Order of CHRIST (a Portugueſe Order,) Commander of the Royal Order of the Iron Crown, First Aid du-Camp of His Majesty the Emperor of the French and King of Italy, &c. &c. &c.

IRISH RESOLUTION.—When the union with England and Ireland was first in agitation, many citizens in Dublin, who were inimical to the measure, unanimously resolved "to burn every article imported from this country, except coals!"

Though Buonaparte's schemes are, in general, uniform, it must be allowed that, in the cases of Pichegru, Touissaint, the Duke D'Enghein, and some others, his conduct has borne evident signs of patch work.

New fashions in future are daily making their appearance. Lately Egytian and Turkish couches have carried the day beyond all competition in the modish world, and have employed all the efforts of our stylish tapissiers. Some of the Cabinet-makers, who have little or no business, are, however, very active in introducing a change; for which purpose they are preparing very elegant and charming designs, upon a new idea, in this country—Beds of roses.

Copied from The Vermont Mercury.—"I desire that no man will credit Mary Williams, my wife, on my account—T. Willams,"

"T. Williams need not have advertised me, as no one will credit him on his own account.—M. Williams.

Many of Bonaparte's admirers in Paris have carried their adulation so far as to affix his imperial visage to their drinking vessels, &c. The Parisian wits consequently augur that the ambitious Corsican is going to pot.

When the news of the capture of the Cape of Good Hope first arrived, it was observed, that the career of the new Ministry had a very auspicious commencement, since it began by converting Hope into possession.

A gentleman formerly in Administration under Mr. Addington, to whom a place was offered by the present Ministers, complained to a friend, that they wished to mount him on a poney. "I understand you," said his friend, and you "want to ride the high horse!"

BON-MOT.—A gentleman was lately asked by Mrs. Billington in a large party, "whether he was not a Connoisseur in music?—The answer was, "indeed, Madam, I do not know a single note, unless (bowing to the fair Syren,) it be—a note of admiration!"

An Irish gentleman giving a discription of the late Lord G——'s house, said, after enumerating several particulars, "then we proceeded into the hunting-room, which is adorned with stags horns, and other family pictures!"

LORD MELVILLE'S TRIAL.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

Now, that a great number of our readers have witneſſed the ſolemnities of the higheſt mode of adminiſtering juſtice in this country, and not only had opportunities of obſerving the decorum of the legal proceedings, but were ſpectators of the conſiderate demeanour, the elegance, and the polite diſcipline of a faſhionable audience in the 19th century, the following characteriſtic memorial of the manners of a similar assembly, at the trial of the Earl of Strafford, in the year 1641, may not be unacceptable. It is extracted from a Journal written by Robert Baillie, D. D. Principal of the Univerſity of Glaſgow, and a deputy from the Preſbytery of Irvine to the aſſembly of divines at Weſtminſter. His manuſcripts were printed at Edinburgh in the year 1775. After deſcribing the arrangement of the ſeats, which was ſo far different from ours, as that the throne was at the north end of Weſtminſter-hall, the writer ſays—

" All the doors are kept ſtrictly with guards. We always behoved to be there a little before five in the morning. Lord Willoughby, Earl Lindſey, Lord Chamberlain of England, ordered the houſe, with great difficulty. James Maxwell, Black Rod, was Great Uſher; a number of other ſervants, gentlemen and knights, aſſiſted; by favor we got place within the rail among the Commons. The houſe was full daily before ſeven; againſt eight, the Earl of Strafford came in his barge from the tower, attended with the lieutenant and a guard of muſqueteers and halberdiers. The Lords in their robes were ſet about eight. The King was uſually half an hour before them. He came not into his own throne, for that would have marred the action; for it is the order of England when the King appears, he ſpeaks what he will, but no other ſpeaks in his preſence. At the back of the throne were two rooms on the two ſides. In the one ſat the King, Queen, Princes, Princeſs Mary, the Prince Elector, and ſome court ladies. The tirlies (blinds) that made them ſecret, the King brake down with his own hands; ſo that they ſat in the eyes of all; but little more regarded than if they had been abſent, for the Lords ſat all covered. Thoſe of the lower houſe and all other ſat diſcovered when the Lords came, not elſe. A number of ladies were in boxes over the rails, for which they paid much money. 'It was daily the moſt glorious aſſembly the iſle could afford;' yet the gravity not ſuch as I expected. Oft great clamour without, about the doors. In the intervals, while Lord Strafford was making ready for anſwers, the Lords got always to their feet, walked and chatted; the lower house men too loud chatting. After ten, much public eating, not only of confections, but of flesh and bread, bottles of beer and wine going thick from mouth to mouth, without cups, and all this in the King's eye; yea, many but turned their backs and ......"

Elegant Impromptu.

When Counsellor Madan was once at Croyden Assizes, he went in company with a very beautiful young lady to hear the trials. In the course of conversation, the lady happened to say, that she thought some of the little offenders were punished with too much severity; while others guilty of greater crimes, were suffered to escape, "Do not you think so, Sir." I do, Madam, (replied he) and if you will lend me your pencil I will give it you under my hand. He immediately wrote the following lines:

"Whilst petty offences and felonies smart,
Is there no jurisdiction for stealing a heart?
You fair one may smile, and cry "Law I defy you,"
Assured that no peers can be summon'd to try you—
But think not this paltry defence will secure ye,
The Muses and Graces will just make a Jury."

An Eccentric.

The late Mr. G. Stachpole observing, that every set of servants cheated their masters, said, that "as he could not expect better luck than his neighbours, and did not wish any of his property to go out of his own family; he would have his from his poor relations"—he did so, and it was not uncommon to hear him call out, when his table was full of company of the first respectability, "Uncle Tom, tell Cousin Dick to go down to the kitchen, and tell Aunt Betty she has roasted the mutton to rags."

The following is the return Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton of Russell-street, recently made to the assessors of Walcot; of Male Servants, Horses, Mules, Carriages, Dogs, &c.

"Not a male in our house,
Not so much as a mouse,
Nor a horse, nor a dog, as true written;
For search house and ground,
Not a beast could be found,
But a hungry old cat and her kitten."

This Lady is the Author of a well written Novel, entitled 'Modern Philosophers."

Apollonian Wreath.

TO A FRIEND AT OXFORD.

In this ſad place, this ſolitary ſpot,
Where drills eternal, aggravate my lot;
Where varied hours, a change of ſorrows bring,
Where flies, by day,—by night, MUSQUITOES ſting:
Forlorn, and ſad; can I poetics try,
Or waft a ſentiment without a ſigh?
Yet, yet, I write; no ſorrows can ſubdue,
Reſpect for Merton, and regard for you.

Ye ſacred pinnacles! ye tow'rs ſublime,
Ye verdant meadows, of a happier clime!
Where oft, in hours of ſtudy, or of ſport,
We ſipp'd of Helicon; or ſwigged of port,
Whilſt Iſis gathered, as ſhe roll'd along,
The catch convivial, or the Minſtrel's ſong;
Can diſtance weaken, or can time efface
The ſweet remembrance of that hallowed place?

Regretted field! (where, impotent to awe,
The wigs of proctors, or the voice of law;
Thy ſons are free; and conſcious of their eaſe,
Roam where they will; and ſtudy when they pleaſe)
Nurs'd in thy bow'rs, what luxuries repaid,
The five years abſtinence, of Eton's ſhade;
A hoſt of faſhion;—and, a flood of wine,
Dogs, horſes,—all, that riches could aſſign.

Yet mem'ry ceaſe, nor labour to deſtroy,
Thy preſent calm, by retroſpects of joy;
Ye viſions fly,—Ye ſcenes of bliſs retire!
Nor poiſon life, with impotent deſire;
No! be it mine, through many a boiſterous year,
To brave the ſtorms, of SUBALTERN career,
To wake each morn, and haſten to fulfill
The rapid duties, of mechanic drill,

To ſquare the ſhoulders, and adjuſt the heel,
And teach the SABLE WARRIOR to wheel;
At veſper feaſts, to counterfeit the laugh,
And praiſe the pointleſs humour of the ſtaff;
Or frame, the look of intereſt; to ſuit
The long, long ſtory, of the wars of COOTE;
Yes, be it mine, by ſterneſt fortune driv'n,
To ſtarve from month to month on FIFTY-SEVEN,
Whilſt weekly poſts, in quick ſucceſſion ſhow,
The claims of B, or of HOPE and Co.!

VAIN hope! the wayward paſſions of the ſoul,
What hints can check, what cenſures can controul?
Oft in the ranks,—when memory pourtrays,
The many pleaſures, of our college days;
And wraps the mind, in dreams of former joy,
Inſtinctive motions every limb employ!
And often too, when, deſtined to purſue,
The myſtic limits of the ſquare review;
I ſcorn the frown,—and cenſure yet to come,
Nor heed the cadence of the meaſuring drum!
At dinner too, no effort can engage
My fix'd attention, to the tales of age.
When true, to time, and place, and how, and who,
The dull hiſtorians of Eighty-two,
(The line adjuſted, and the ranks arrayed)
Lull their grave audience with a cannonade,
Still, ſad to me, the hours appear to creep
Who cannot liſten, and who muſt not ſleep!

THOU know'ſt with what fond ecſtacy, I ſped,
Charm'd with the beauties of the MARTIAL RED,
Whilſt Fancy brought, from out her fairy loom,
The claſſic coronet of LAUREL-BLOOM
And hope as oft, ſhe choſe her ſofteſt lay,
Smooth'd the long diſtance of my watery way.
How oft have I refus'd, when urged to wear,
The grave redundency, of legal hair;
How oft, well pleas'd, have plotted to eſcape,
The robe of linen, and the band of crape,
No! be it mine, (I cried) to charm the Fair
With arts of dreſs, and elegance of air,

To reign the fav'rite, of a fav'rite set,
(Known by the brilliance of the EPAULETTE.)
Let others triumph, in the wordy war,
Storm in the DESK, or thunder at the BAR,
Like Thompson mould, the passions at his will,
Like Erskine argue, or declaim like Hill;
Be mine the softer eloquence that draws
From Belles of taste, the titter of applause!

BUT ah! how far, from all, that Fancy plann'd
The sombre dulness, of this horrid land,
No Flirts, no Belles, no gallantry, is here;
No sighs that melt the soul; no smiles that cheer:
No dances here, disturb the sleep of Life,
No music;—but, the music of the Fife!
But still, from morn, to morn;—the Bugle shrill,
Wakes the sad Soldier, to repeated drill;
To solid squares, and marches of review,
And columns close, and columns open too;
And when the moon shoots forth, her paly beam,
DUNDAS supplies, the everlasting theme;
Parades, and drills, throughout the dinner reign
With all the trappings of an army train.

IF from the night-couch too, I steal a look,
Still glides the genius, of the mystic book,
Embodied Tactics, through the chamber pass,
Ghosts under arms, and spirits of Dundas;

YET, 'ere I wander'd, from the Abbey gloom,
Concurring presages foretold my doom,
Sunk was the sun, and showery the day,
And dark the clouds sail'd, on the turrets grey,
Prophetic murmurs floated on the breeze,
Breath'd the dark fate,—and usher'd it decrees.

WARN then, each son of Science; to dismiss
The idle dreams, of visionary bliss;
Tell him, the boast of military grace,
The cap of plumage, and the coat of lace,
Claims no precedence, o'er the dark attire,
Where dwell, no belles of fashion, to admire.

Tell him, that here, ſucceſſive ſeaſons yield,
Griefs of the Fort, or troubles of the field,
Or; ſad, and ſorrowful, the exile ſtrays,
Conſign'd to drill, and deſtin'd to field-days,
Or plac'd, where woods, immeaſurably ſpread,
Diſtil the Death-dew, o'er the Soldier's head,
Hous'd in the tent, and cradled on the ſoil,
Each morn recalls him to repeated toil.

 The Editor of the Monthly Journal is aware that the above elegant, and truly claſſical lines, have already appeared in the Courier:—he republiſhes them at the particular requeſt of ſeveral of his Military Subſcribers.

THE VIOLET.

Let other Poets hail the ſweets,
The beauties of the Rose;
A humble theme my verſe inſpires,
The Violet I choſe.

Thou ſweet attendant of the Spring,
Beauteous, bluſhing flower,
Who ſpread'ſt thy perfume all around,
Beneath thy moſſy bower.

Oft have I wander'd to the bank,
Where mid the ſilky graſs,
Thy fragrant buds refreſh the gale,
And greet me as I paſs.

But ah! how oft thy ſweeteſt flowers,
Perfume the deſert air,
Unnotic'd there awhile they live,
Unſeen they periſh there.

E'en ſo oftimes in humble life,
The fruits of genius lie,
But in obſcurity they're hid,
And unregarded die.

Domestic Occurrences

MADRAS, BENGAL, BOMBAY, CEYLON, & PENANG.

Madras, Thursday, March 5, 1807.

G. O. BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

Head Quarters, Choulty Plain:—February 14, 1807.

The appearance of the Madras Fencibles at the review this morning, gives to the Commander in Chief the satisfaction of repeating, with undiminished force, the praise so justly due to that corps.

Their discipline and efficiency have been so long acknowledged, and it is unnecessary to dwell upon those points, further, than to permit the strongest impression of the loss, the service is about to sustain in the reduction of this valuable battalion.

From their earliest formation to the present moment, the Madras Fencibles have displayed that same zealous, active and uninterrupted discharge of their duty, as gave assurance, that had the event of their time led to the demand for their service in any part of India, foreign as well as domestic distinction, would have attended their course.

The prudential reason of the State, and the general situation of affairs, now compel their dissolution, but Sir John Cradock, is persuaded, that, upon the first appearance of a necessity, colonel Taswell and the other meritorious officers of this corps will reunite, and again contemning the excuse of civil avocation, give a fresh example of military and partiotic spirit.

February 21, 1807.

The Commander in Chief cannot deny himself the satisfaction of expressing his extreme approbation, upon the appearance of the brigade assembled in line this morning for field exercise—his excellency returns his warmest acknowledgements to Major General Fuller for his ability and exertions so apparent in their effect, and he requests the Gen. to communicate the same sentiment to the several commanding officers of the horse artillery, the right honorable the Governor's body-guard and the infantry—it has long been the ardent wish of the Commander in Chief to view the forces of this presidency, collected in sufficient bodies to admit the name of field movements, and give a scope to that active and martial spirit, for which the troops of the coast army have long been so justly distinguished: but the extensive range of quarters and perverse accident too often frustrates the attempt.

Prevailing difficulties, however it is hoped may pass away; and this desired object so entirely sanctioned and supported by Govt. be now allowed to take full effect.

To attain that height of perfection, in field usuage and exercise of the line, which the army of Fort St. George (reflecting upon the character they possess) may, if they please, command; it is only necessary to be sensible, that regimental excellence and exertion is the ground-work of all distinction, and—that the officer who brings his corps to the place of assembly in good order, and well taught, has just cause for pride, as, really exercising that profession he asserts, and, that such a mind and spirit give to him the solid and superior claim for staff employment—the Commander in Chief alludes to those of the higher and more active order in the field, for there are others, however acquired in the military arrangements that cannot be supposed to equally interest the feelings of a soldier.

General Orders by Government,

Fort St. George, February 27, 1807.

The Right Honorable the Governor in Council, in conformity to Orders received from the Supreme Government in India, directs that the 1st regiment of Native Fencibles, shall be disembodied on the 28th instant, and that the Regimental Staff shall be discharged from that date.

His Lordship in Council takes this opportunity of publishing in General Orders his perfect approbation of the conduct of the Native Fencibles, from their first formation to the present period: and is pleased to declare Lieutenant Colonel Taswell, to be entitled to his particular acknowledgments, as well for having formed and disciplined so valuable a regiment, as also for having been the means of rendering an essential benefit to the Public Service, by transferring to the regular Establishment a large proportion of well disciplined and exemplary men.

His Lordship in Council is also pleased to publish in General Orders his acknowledgements to the Field Officers and to the other officers of the Corps for their useful and voluntary services.

His Lordship in Council directs, that the same gratuity as in former years shall be given to the European Officers; and that a donation of one Month's Pay shall be issued to the Native Officers and men as also to the Non-Commissioned Staff and Followers of the regiment, as a mark of his Lordship's approbation.

His Lordship in Council directs, that the colours of the Native Fencibles, shall be deposited in the Armoury of Fort St. George and that the officers of the regiment shall retain the Commissions of their present rank, with the exception of such of them as may not be willing to serve on any future occasion in the same capacity; such officers will be permitted to resign their Commissions, on submitting a requst to that effect to the Right Honorable the Governor, through the channel of their Commanding Officer.

His Excellency the Commander in Chief will be pleased to give the necessary directions for receiving the Volunteers for the 2d battalion of the 25th regiment Native Infantry, and for taking charge of the Arms and Military Stores of the 1st regiment of Native Fencibles.

His Excellency will also be pleased to assign to the Native Commissioned and Non-Commissioned Officers of the Native Fencibles, who may volunteer for the 2d battalion of the 25th regiment of Native Infantry, the rank which they at present enjoy in the former Corps.

Lieutenant Colonel Taswell, will fully explain this order to the Officers and men under his Command.

The Right Honorable the Governor in Council having resolved to reduce the battalions of Native Infantry, extra to the regular establishment of this Presidency, is pleased to direct, that the Tanjore Provincial battalion shall be discontinued from the returns of the Army from the last day of the present Month.

A Donation of one Month's Pay will be given to the Native Commissioned, Non-Commissioned Officers, and Privates and followers of the Tanjore Provincial battalion, on its reduction, as a mark of the approbation with which the Government has viewed their services.

In further testimony of the approbation of the Government of the services of this Corps, the Native Commissioned, Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of the battalion will have an option of remaining in the regular service of the Company with the rank they respectively hold, should they be willing to be so transferred to the 2d battalion of the 24th regiment of Native Infantry in which they will be received with the full claims to future benefit resulting from their former service in the Tanjore Provincial battalion.

Captain Butler, will fully explain this order to the corps.

February 24, 1807.

Colonel Harcourt, of His Majesty's 12th Regiment of Foot, having obtained the permission of the Right Honorable the Commander in Chief in India to proceed to England, the Right Honorable the Governor in Council permits Colonel Harcourt, to resign the command of Vellore.

His Lordship in Council at the same time takes this occasion to express his entire approbation of the mode in which Colonel Harcourt, has conducted the duties of that Command, under circumstances of particular difficulty and importance.

MADRAS FENCIBLE REGIMENT.

We have the pleasure to lay before our Readers, the ceremonies observed in lodging the colours of that zealous and distinguished corps "The Madras Fencible Regiment;" and though we regret with them, that they are placed in a temporary state of retirement; (their services being at present unnecessary;) yet we receive with confidence, the conviction, that should future circumstances again call them forth, the same zeal and energy will mark their conduct, as have heretofore so highly exalted their character.

On the 27th ultimo at 5 o'clock in the evening, the regiment marched in by the Fort St. George gate, to "the Fencible March;" and drew up in line, in front of the artillery barracks, facing the Fort square:—his majesty's 94th regiment were under arms in open order to receive them, near their barracks; their right extending towards the artillery barracks.

On the right honorable the Governor's entering the parade, the bugles sounded "the preparation to advance;" and the band and drums striking up "the Grenadiers March," the Fencible regiment moved to the parade; (field and staff officers dismounted, the commanding officer and adjutant only excepted) drew up in open order, opposite his majesty's 94th regiment, their right to the fort square; and saluted the right honorable the Governor.

The grenadiers of his majesty's 94th regiment then advanced to the front of the fencible regiment, the colours of which were delivered to them by the commanding officer, the band playing "Britons strike home:"—The following energetic address was then made by his excellency the Commander in Chief.

"COLONEL TASWELL,

"The right honorable the Lady William Bentinck has done me the great honor, to depute to me the expression of her feeling on the present occasion, while she receives from your hands, the colours, which two years ago, were presented by her Ladyship to the 1st battalion of Madras Fencibles

"Lady William Bentinck has requested me to signify to you, that at the time she had the honor of presenting their colours, to the battalion under your command, she cherished a confidence, that she was entrusting them to the care of those, who would do justice to so sacred a charge; her Ladyship's expectations have been most amply fulfilled, as in the public prints, she has had repeated opportunities of perusing, (and with no small degree of satisfaction) such flattering testimonies of the discipline, regularity and appearance of the Madras Fencibles.

"Her Ladyship feels considerable regret, that circumstances have rendered the farther services of this corps unnecessary? but she entertains a full conviction, that in the hour of emergency the same laudable spirit of patriotism, which actuated gentlemen to sacrifice many private comforts, and subject themselves to various inconveniences, in the public cause, would again urge them to come forward; and in the necessity of such an event Lady William Bentinck begs leave to assure colonel Taswell and the officers of the regiment, that she will feel a pride, in being the instrument of restoring their colours to the Madras Fencibles."

Colonel Taswell's Reply,

"MADAM,

"Flattered by your Ladyship's marked approbation of this regiment, so impressively delivered by his excellency the Commander in Chief, I beg to return my most respectful acknowledgments, and to express my concern in its having thus fallen to my lot to return you these revered bands of our association—in fulfilling this unpleasant part of my present duty, it is some relief to my feelings, to observe that their consequence has been preserved as perfect, as at the period of their having been entrusted to our charge, and that this respectable corps has been ever awake to the distinguished favor, and honorable notice of your Ladyship."

The officers of the regiment being then ordered to the center, in face of the colours, colonel Taswell, addressed them as follows:—

"Assembled here as companions in the last act of our present military duties, to pay our unfeigned respects to the departing banners under which we have served, I trust there is not one amongst us, who will not be sensible in some degree to their loss.

"The honorable attention that is now paid to them, must be flattering to us, under the persuasion that had they been displayed in the face of a foe, we should have done them that credit, to which they have the claim, and that our invariable regards to pledges so sacred, have insured the confidence thus placed in us, as likewise, that on no other occasion should we have surrendered them with satisfaction to ourselves: especially, if we look back to the impressive moment of their possession, and hold in our minds, the high character of the personage, who conferred upon us that honor.

"It must be gratifying to us to view their present resignation, as an honorable trust; to be restored to the first regiment of Madras Fencibles, should they be ever required in their country's service, and that in the mean time, they are to be lodged in the public repository of military honors, the grand Arsenal of our Government.

"I cannot take my leave of so valuable a body, without marking my regard and affection to them which is the consequence of that steady and constant readiness they have so generally shewn, in the execution of their duties while under my command—For this, they have my most sincere thanks, and my warmest wishes that they may hereafter experience the full tribute due to their exemplary characters, in their future military walk—Placing the most implicit faith in this, I now quit them with a satisfaction, which compensates in some measure for their loss at an event, and moment, that cannot be ever effaced from the memory of their zealous associate, and most faithful friend."

The two center companies of the Fencible regiment then wheeled back and formed a street, thro' which the grenadies of his majesty's 94th regiment passed with the colours towards the Arsenal, the band playing the appropriate tune of "Farewell to Lochaber" —and the regiment firing three vollies.

The colours having passed the street formed by the center companies, they wheeled into line and took close order; when the regiment marched to the "British Grenadiers," round the right honorable the Governor in their retreat from the fort; passing the line of his majesty's 94th regiment.

ADDRESS TO LORD LAKE.

His excellency the right honorable the Commander in Chief having appointed Monday, the 16th instant, to receive an address from the Bengal cavalry, it was presented to his Lordship by major Armstrong, captain Gall, captain Becher, and lieutenant Fielding, who, (with colonel Smith now on the river,) were selected by the officers of cavalry, to represent them on this interesting occasion.

To the Right Honorable Lord Lake, Commander in Chief, &c. &c.

My Lord,

We the officers of native cavalry, deeply penetrated with a grateful sense of the distinguished notice, with which our corps has been uniformly honored by your Lordship, since you have been placed at the head of the Indian army, feel impelled on the occasion of your Lordship's departure for Europe, to render you our most grateful and heartfelt acknowledgments, for the numerous favours we have experienced from your Lordship.

We can never forget that our corps was but in embryo at the time your Lordship took the command of the army, that to promote its efficiency and to increase its respectability, were among the first objects which engaged your Lordship's attention. That under your Lordship's superintendence, its discipline attained a degree of perfection, seldom equalled and never surpassed by any native corps; and finally that your Lordship conducted and led it in all the principal actions of the late war, inspiring both by your example and countenance, that heroic spirit which enabled it to overcome every difficulty which it had to encounter, and to establish a character that will long be a terror to our enemies. Such are the obligations we owe to your Lordship, obligations which we shall remember to our latest hour, with pride, and with gratitude.

While as individuals, we sincerely regret your Lordship's departure from India, where your military fame will long survive, we have still the consolation to reflect, that after having passed through dangers the most trying and eminent; and hardships the most laborious, and severe, your Lordship's health has remained unimpaired, giving us the gratifying prospect of your Lordship's enjoying many happy years in your native land; honored and cherished by a benevolent sovereign, and beloved, and adored, by a grateful country, whose fame and glory, you have so successfully supported.

That your Lordſhip may meet with the approbation and rewards from our honorable employers, which your eminent ſervices have ſo well merited, and that you may long enjoy every bleſſing and happineſs, is the fervent prayer of

Your Lordſhip's &c. &c.

[Here follow the ſignatures]

The addreſs having been read by captain Gall, his Lordſhip was pleaſed to make the ſubjoined reply.

To the Officers of the Bengal Native Cavalry.

GENTLEMEN,

I beg leave to offer you my moſt ſincere acknowledgements for the very flattering ſentiments you have been pleaſed to expreſs in the addreſs with which you have honored me, on the occaſion of my departure for Europe.

Since my arrival in India, the native cavalry of Bengal has been a favorite object of my attention, and it affords me the utmoſt ſatisfaction, that under my care and ſuperintendence it has not only attained a high degree of diſcipline and efficiency, but on the baſis of ſucceſsful exertions has eſtabliſhed a reputation which few corps have been able to obtain, and none in any country to ſurpaſs.

Our ſeveral campaigns have given abundant proofs of your activity, fortitude, valour, and every quality that can render troops reſpectable, and the hiſtory of every action in which we have been engaged, will afford indiſputable evidence that the Bengal army has derived from you, an important ſhare of its preſent ſtrength, efficiency, and perfection.

The zeal you have ſo often manifeſted, the deſire of excellence by which I know you to be animated, and the conviction you poſſeſs, that your high reputation is the reſult of of diſcipline, all concur in impreſſing me with an aſſurance that you will continue to cultivate every quality that can give permanence to your ſuperiority, and ſtability to your fame.

As you have hitherto been the peculiar objects of my attention, and fully juſtified by your meritorious conduct the high expectations I had formed of you, I can never ceaſe to feel the warmeſt intereſt in your proſperity, nor to entertain the moſt ardent wiſhes for your future welfare, ſucceſs, and glory.

(Signed) LAKE.

HEAD QUARTERS, Calcutta, Feb. 16, 1807.

To His Excellency The Right Honorable Lord Lake, Commander in Chief, &c. &c. &c,

MY LORD.

Contemplating with ſincere regret the proſpect of your lordſhip's unexpected departure from a country ſo deeply indebted to your eminent ſervices from an army whoſe affectionate regard you ſo ſo fully poſſeſs, we feel ourſelves called upon to expreſs the genuine ſentiments which dictate the preſent addreſs.

The Bengal army, under your lordſhip's auſpices, has proceeded from one ſucceſs to another; whole provinces have been conquered with a rapidity ſcarcely equalled, and every new deſpatch has announced ſome new acceſſion of territory or of fame.

Your lordſhip, anxious to ſecure by mildneſs what has been won by valour, and to preſerve our victories unſullied, has inceſſantly laboured to eſtabliſh our reputation on the imperiſhable baſis of humanity.

The ſoldier has ever looked up to you as his protector and friend: animated by your preſence and encouraged by your example, unmoved by danger, and heedleſs of privation or fatigue, he has obeyed without a murmur every order, has ſubmitted to every hardſhip, has followed where your genius led the way, to convey the terror of our arms and the knowledge of our juſtice to nations hitherto ſcarcely known. The generous protection afforded to thoſe officers diſabled in the arms of victory, forms a diſtinguiſhed trait in your lordſhip's character.

The truly honourable mind, though courting no applauſe, cannot be indifferent to the good opinion of thoſe for whoſe benefit its energies have been exerted; we therefore hope this honeſt tribute of regard will be received by your lordſhip with ſatisfaction, and ſhould you have departed for Europe before it reaches this preſidency, we truſt that even there you will receive it with pleaſure.

Crowned with public honors and private reſpect, accompanied by a ſon whoſe conſpicuous gallantry has excited our univerſal admiration and our warmeſt wiſhes in his favour, may you in the boſom of your family long continue to enjoy your well earned fame.

To the Officers of the Diviſion of the Army ſtationed at Muttra, &c. &c. &c.

GENTLEMEN,

I have received with ſentiments of the moſt ſincere ſatisfaction

the addreſs dated the 21ſt January, with which you have been pleaſed to honor me.

As the Bengal army poſſeſſes the higheſt place in my eſtimation, I conſider its favourable opinion and regard as objects of the utmoſt value; and the moſt ſincere gratification I could enjoy on the occaſion of my departure from India, is the aſſurance of poſſeſſing its eſteem and approbation.

The high diſcipline, zeal, and valour of the troops I have had the honor to command, are the true ſources of the ſucceſs which has crowned our exertions. I feel with ſincere gratitude that to thoſe qualities I am indebted for the applauſe which has diſtinguiſhed my ſervices, and to them alſo are to be attributed thoſe ineſtimable advantages which have been obtained during our late glorious conteſts with the enemies of our country

I am too well acquainted with the Bengal army to entertain a doubt that they will maintain unſullied the high reputation they have acquired, and I am equally confident that every occaſion that may require their future exertions, will but afford them the means of adding to their fame, pre-eminence, and glory.

To afford my protection to thoſe officers who have been diſabled in the courſe of our arduous ſervices, has conſtituted a moſt agreeable part of my duty, and I anxiouſly truſt, that from the well merited favour of a juſt government, they will in future derive every poſſible ſupport that can be extended to their ſituations.

Your expreſſions, reſpecting my Son, are peculiarly grateful to the deareſt feelings of my heart; my moſt ſanguine hopes and wiſhes have been gratified in his conduct, and your applauſe has given me an aſſurance that my ſentiments have not been biaſſed by the partiality of a Parent. I feel confident that he will ever remember with attachment and affection, the companions of his early ſervices, and find in their eſteem and approbation the ſtrongeſt incentive, as well as the deareſt reward, to future exertion.

With beſt wiſhes for your ſucceſs, proſperity and glory, and with the moſt ſincere ſentiment, eſteem, gratitude, and attachment, I ſhall ever remain, GENTLEMEN,

Your moſt faithful and obedient Servant, (Signed) LAKE.

HEAD QUARTERS, Calcutta, Feb. 10, 1807.

His excellency the right honorable Lord Lake, having appointed Tueſday, the 7th inſtant, for receiving the addreſſes of the officers of the military ſtations of the preſidency and Dinapore; colonel Morris, commandant at the preſidency, accompanied by lieutenant colonel Garstin, lieutenant colonel Hardwick, lieutenant colonel Colebrooke, major Murray, major Hawkes, and captain Rose, waited upon his Lordship and presented the following address.

To General the Right Honorable Lord Lake, Commander in Chief of His Majesty's and the Honorable Company's Forces in India.

My Lord,

We, the officers of his majesty's and the honorable company's forces serving at the presidency beg leave, on the occasion of your approaching departure, to express our heartfelt esteem for your Lordship's eminently distinguished character, so brilliantly displayed in the discharge of the important duties of your high station.

Whilst we most deeply deplore that we are so soon to lose a commander, not less dreaded by our enemies, than beloved by all who have the happiness of serving under him; we derive some consolation in observing, that your health has not suffered from the influence of a hostile climate, nor from your unparallelled exertions, through the several arduous campaigns, from the commencement of the war to its glorious termination.

But, my Lord, whenever the time shall arrive, that, to the regret of your country, you withdraw from public life, long may you enjoy in dignified retirement, the felicity so justly due to your private virtues and heroic fame; and, superadded to the gratifying reflection which much result from the consciousness of the effects of your victories on the prosperity of your country, your Lordship will then also enjoy the pleasing retrospect of that benevolent use of your power, which has provided, to its utmost extent, for the comfort of those who have been disabled in the various actions fought under your direction, and command.

Such an association of public virtue and humane consideration for the unfortunate, indelibly impresses on our minds the warmest and most affectionate interest in your Lordship's success; and, combined as it is with our admiration of your military talents, and grateful remembrance of your affability and goodness, we trust you will believe we shall ever feel the most ardent solicitude for your Lordship's prosperity.

Fort William.

To which his Lordship was pleased to return the following answer:—

To Colonel Morris and the Officers of His Majestey's and the Honorable Company's Troops stationed at the Presidency.

GENTLEMEN,

I feel most sincerely gratified by the esteem for my character, and the interest in my welfare, which you have been pleased to express in the address with which you have honored me, on the occasion of my departure from India.

Among the officers now stationed at the presidency, there are many from whose exertions the public service has derived very considerable advantage, and to whose meritorious couduct I ascribe much of that success which has distinguished our several campaigns. There are other who did not participate in our labours, but whose acknowledged public spirit and zeal in their profession must, whenever their services are employed, ensure to their efforts a result equally successful. The high reputation which they all so deservedly enjoy, bestows the utmost value on their praise and approbation, and has particularly endeared to me those sentiments of esteem and regard, of which they have afforded so flattering a testimony.

To have promoted to the utmost of my ability the prosperity of my country, and to have provided as far as possible for the comfort of those who have been disabled in its service, though in both I but performed an indispensable duty, afford reflections which, under every future circumstance of my life, will constitute to my mind, a permanent source of the most sincere gratification.

Whilst I feel the warmest gratitude for the interest you have expressed in my success, and the partiality with which you have viewed my military talents, I shall ever cherish the recollection of your private and public virtues, and offer up my most ardent wishes for your future fame, welfare, dnd prosperity.

With feelings of the most sincere esteem, regard, and attachment, I shall ever remain, &c. &c.

DINAPORE ADDRESS.

The same gentlemen, in the name of the officers of the Dinapore station, presented the following address:—

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Lake, Commander in Chief, &c. &c. &c.

MY LORD,

We the undersigned officers of the Dinapore station, deeply ſenſible of the great national advantages which have attended your Lordſhip's public exertions in this country, embrace this opportunity of expreſſing our eſteem and reſpect for your perſon and character, and our ſincere regret at your leaving India.

To the wiſdom, vigilance, and deciſive energy of your Lordſhip, Great Britain is indebted for the conqueſts, which have proved no leſs beneficial to the general intereſt of the Britiſh empire in the eaſt, than reflective of new luſtre on the reputation of this army, the intereſts of which have ever been attended to by your Lordſhip, during a courſe of unexampled glory, which hiſtory will record, and poſterity read with enthuſiaſm.

To theſe ſentiments, which are excited by the feelings of gratitude and juſtice, we are induced to add an earneſt and anxious hope, that in theſe critical times, your country may avail herſelf of that integrity, experience, and talents, which ſo admirably qualify your Lordſhip, for the moſt arduous public truſts.

When our King and Country require your Lordſhip's future ſervices, you may meet with better ſoldiers, but none more faithfully attached to your perſon, than &c.

[Here follow the ſignatures.]

To Major General Clark, and the Officers ſtationed at Dinapore.

GENTLEMEN,

I have been honored with your addreſs, and I derive the moſt ſincere ſatisfaction from your expreſſions of eſteem and reſpect, from the high opinion you entertain of the advantages that have reſulted to the Britiſh empire in India from my public exertions.

The diſtinguiſhed reputation which the Bengal army enjoys, has been eſtabliſhed and ſecured by its valour and diſcipline, and it is to me a ſubject of juſt exultation that I have been the means of directing thoſe qualities to the attainment of advantages and the atchievement of conqueſts, at once beneficial aad honorable to our country.

The corps now ſtationed at Dinapore ſuſtained an important ſhare in the difficulties and dangers the army had to encounter; and the diſtinguiſhed merit they on all occaſions evinced, has raiſed them to the higheſt place in my eſtimation, and entitled them to every teſtimony of favor and approbation that can be beſtowed on them by a grateful Government.

On my departure from India, I indulge the hope, that the government you have ſo faithfully ſerved, will reſpect your intereſts, and render juſtice to your claims; I ſhall carry with me a conviction, that in whatever situation my future services may be required, I can never meet with better soldiers, nor with an army whose attachment I shall be prouder to have obtained.

With the warmest interest in your fame and prosperity, I shall ever remain, &c. LAKE.

VACCINE INOCULATION IN CHINA

It is with great satisfaction we witness every effort to introduce and establish the Jennerian inoculation. and we trust that the few remaining prejudices again this most important and valuable discovery will soon yield to the influence of that powerful testimony in its favor which an extended experience of its success cannot fail to afford.

Our readers will feel the same pleasure as ourselves in learning that in this behalf the Chinese have conquered their prejudices against foreign innovation and become sensible of the benefits of the system. Sir G Staunton, son of the celebrated author of that name, has translated into the Chinese language a work on Vaccination, and since its appearance vaccine inoculation has become general at Canton. A considerable sum has been collected for the purpose of founding an establishment for extending the practice in the neighbouring provinces of Canton, and in time to the rest of this vast Empire; where it is computed that the small pox annually destroys one-tenth of the population.

TO WILLIAM T. MONEY, ESQ.
Superintendent of the H. C. Marine, Bombay.

SIR,

It is with the greatest concern I have to inform you, of one of the most unaccountable transactious, that has ever taken place in a public service, and through which I am still detained at this place, with the Sylph, and the Honorable the Governor's Packet, but the assistance I have received from Lieutenant Dean of the Mercury, will enable me to proceed on my voyage to-morrow morning.— On the morning of the 17th January, I went on board at half past nine, A. M. with the Packet for Bussora, not being able to get over the inner bar, before that day from the N. W. wind, keeping the flood tide to flow; on my arrival on board, I was astonished and surprized beyond measure to find my officer Lieutenant Cox, had quitted the vessel about one hour before with a large boat, he had forceably taken, belonging to the Sheik of Bushire, (which had come along side for a few sail-needles) to attack four large Dows that where at anchor about five miles to the southward of the town, immediately on my arrival on board I hoisted the ensign, and fired four guns to endeavour if possible to bring him back, he being then about three miles from the vessel, but no attention was paid to it, (the Pilot had got the vessel underweigh about ten minutes before I was on board) I then furled all sail, anchored and fired three more guns to shew him it was my intention to follow him, hoping it would have the desired effect, however no notice was taken of it and he still went on for the boats, finding that was the case, I immediately got underweigh and set all sail to go to his assistance and bring him back if possible. After standing to the S. W. for about half an hour, we were obliged to tack and stand to the Northward, (this was about half past 10 A. M.) the wind W. N. W. at the time he had fired several shot at them, they had only returned one, whether it was my standing to the Northward, or what I do not know, but he at that time left them and stood on shore, the boats got underweigh and stood to sea, unfortunately shortly after I was obliged to tack again to the Southward to clear the bar, he again stood for the boats when they wore round and in a few minutes he fell; I was then obliged to run for the inner road again, having nothing left to defend the Sylph, in case they should come and attack me, as they would see by the crew that had fallen into their hands the state the vessel must have been left in. One of the unfortunate men a Lascar was picked up yesterday, who had been pierced in three places by a Pike. We are now on the look out to pick more when they float as I have no doubt but every man has loſt his life—William Bruce, Eſq. was on the Beach at the time with a glaſs and he informed me, on the fall of our boat they jumped on board, and he believed they piked every man. It happened oppoſite his country houſe, about one mile from the ſhore, the following is a liſt of the unfortunate men.

One acting Lieutenant F. Cox, one Havildar, one Naike, twelve Sepoys, ſix Laſcars, two Arab Paſſengers —Total 23.

I have the honor to remain, &c &c. &c.

REGULATION OF GOVERNMENT.—PRESENT, HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL, A. D. 1807.

REGULATION III.

A Regulation for prohibiting the Exportation of grain from the Iſland of Ceylon for a limited period.

Whereas it appears under a Government advertiſement bearing date the 11th of January 1807, and publiſhed by order of the Right Honorable the Governor in Council of Fort St. George, that a conſiderable failure has taken place in the periodical rains of the late monſoon: and whereas ſuch failure muſt produce a conſiderable effect on the quantity of rice annually imported into this iſland from the Coaſt of Coromandel—and whereas it appears further that the premium offered by the government of Fort St. George in the ſaid advertiſement may operate an inducement to export grain from his Majeſty's poſſeſſions in this Iſland to the great diſtreſs of the natives of this colony, his excellency the Governor in Council is pleaſed to enact.

1ſt. That from the date of this Regulation an embargo be laid upon the exportation of rice, paddy, and grain of every kind from any parts of the Britiſh ſettlements on this iſland to the 1ſt of November next.

2d That any attempt to export rice, paddy or any other grain, during the above period, contrary to the tenor of this regulation, be puniſhed by the ſeizure and forfeiture of ſuch grain, and by the ſeizure and confiſcat on of any veſſel ſo attempting, to export it.

3d. The different collectors of cuſtoms are hereby directed to ſpecify in the clearance ef every veſſel and dhony the exact quantity of rice, paddy or other grain in the ſaid veſſel, the amount of which is in every caſe to be limited to a fair and liberal allowance for the voyage of the veſſel.

4. The cargoes of the vessels touching at any of the Ports of this Island during the above period, are excepted from the provisions of this regulations.

5. Dhonies and other vessels trading coastways in the Island are excepted from the provisions of the prese t regulation; but with a view to prevent all evasion the collectors of customs in the various parts of the Island are, previous to such vessels clearing out, and having on board either rice, paddy or other grains to receive a penalty bond from the shipper or shippers, that such grain be actually landed at the port of the Island to which it is destined, in default of which, on due proof, the penalty of the said bond is immediately to be levied by the collector of customs.

The judicious and spirited conduct of Captain Frazer, late of the ship Admiral Rainier, in the management of his ship, while in face of a superior force of the enemy, is stated at some length in the following extract of a letter from a gentleman who was on board the Rainier during the action.

"The Admiral Rainier left Tampatoom on the 15th in the evening, bound to the Southward. On the following morning saw a brig under a press of sail, standing towards us, and coming up very fast. At 1. p. m. the strange sail clued up all his sails, and got out all his sweeps: we got all clear to engage; and two boats ahead to tow us off, but without effect. At ½ past 3, we were within gun shot, the brig hoisted French colours and fired a gun. Captain Frazer, finding it impossible to escape from the ſuperior ſailing of the Frenchman, determined to try the effect of a bold appearance. We accordingly ſhortened ſail, fired a gun, diſplayed our colours, and immediately bore down upon the enemy to engage. She opened a ſmart fire, which we did not attempt to return, till within piſtol ſhot, when we gave her our broad ſide of 4 guns:—we continued the engagement for ¾ of an hour ſtill edging towards her, when ſhe hauled on board her fore and main tacks, and made ſail, to our great ſatisfaction; for although our laſcars behaved moſt admirably, our force was ſo diſproportioned, that we had nothing to hope from the continuance of the action.

"As we judged it neceſſary to give chace, in order to impreſs the enemy with the high opinion of our ſtrength, we made all ſail and found that we came up with him, as after the action, he hauled his courſe up. This was not preciſely what we wiſhed or expected; but as we could not tack after giving chaſe, we got all our guns ſix in number, on one ſide, loaded with round and grape, and arming ſome of our people with ſmall arms, reſolved to run along ſide, and endeavour to give him at leaſt one heavy well directed doſe; but juſt as we came within piſtol ſhot, he hauled on board his tacks, and made of. We then fired a gun and tacked, and ſoon after loſt ſight of our opponent. We then, as an expedient to miſlead the enemy, towed the jolly boat in ſhore, and hoiſting a light in her, ſet her a drift; and then made all ſail poſſible to the North weſt.

Next morning we could juſt diſcern the brig in the S. E. quarter; ſhe had ſeen our light in the boat which they followed and picked up, and thence concluded we were indifferently manned and armed; which induced them to renew the chace. She followed us the whole of the 17th, with all ſail ſet and her ſweeps out. At ſun ſet, Sooſoo bore N. E. diſtance 7 or 8 leagues—the enemy diſtant 3 or 4 miles, nearing us very faſt. We ſhortened ſail, when he hauled in ſhore, and would not allow us to come near him.

" About 11 p. m we were taken back in a ſquall, and on its clearing up, we found ourſelves cloſe along ſide, when we immediately gave him our fire; upon which he wore and ſtood off. We then loſt ſight of him: made ſail to get under the land, hoping he would not ſee us in the morning. At day light, on the 8th, he was ſtill in ſight, though at a great diſtance. At 10 a. m. he was within 3 miles of us and coming up very faſt. He then fired a gun and hoiſted a red flag at his fore top gallant maſt head. A ſquall coming on at this time from the N W. we backed our main top ſail, fired a gun, and hoiſted a red flag at our top gallant maſt head. He then ſheered off and it falling calm, we lay for two hours, quietly though anxiouſly looking at each other, within gun ſhot—his decks appeared to be full of men. At length he got out all his ſweeps, and pulled away from us; when a light breeze ſpringing up he made ſail to the Southward, and we ſtood to the Northward. After being diſtant from us about 5 miles, he again tacked and ſtood after us with all ſail ſet; when within gun ſhot we opened our ſtern chaſers upon him: but failed in the expectation of diſabling any of his maſts.

"Finding that he now came up with us very faſt and with every preparation and apparent determination to board, his decks full of men with ſmall arms. Captain Frazer conceiving it would be a needleſs expoſure of the lives of his crew to attempt further oppoſition, having no means to repell boarders, ordered the colours to be hauled down. The brig proved to be the French National corvette Jeſſaire, mounting eight 12 pound carronades, with 40 Europeans, commanded by a Lieutenant de Vaiſſeau.

"On the 29th the corvette captured the Mongamah of Madras—after taking out the Opium which ſhe had on board, the Mongamah was delivered over to Captain Frazer; and the other priſoners being put on board, ſhe was ſent off as a cartel, with orders to proceed to Tapanoolly for water, and from thence to Madras, where we arrived on the 31ſt January. The treatment we experienced from the Captors was ſuch as claims our gratitude."

Madras, March 26, 1807.

On Monday last arrived H. M. ship Caroline, Capt. Peter Rainier, accompanied by her prize, the Spanish Register ship St. Raphael; captured 27th January in the Straits of St. Bernadine, within a few miles of Manilla. The Spaniard had nearly succeeded in running his ship ashore, when she was taken aback by a squall, of which Captain Rainier immediately took advantage, and the Raphael soon found herself under the lee of the Caroline. The enemy whose vessel is only 450 tons, and 100 men, either from temerity or Spanish pride, maintained a conflict with the Caroline for 10 minutes, and struck her colours; having previously lost 27 men in killed and wounded: among the latter was the Spanish Captain, who received a grape-shot in his arm, and was much hurt in the face; an 18 pound shot also had carried away the skirts of his Coat. We are concerned to say that the loss on board the Caroline was seven men wounded, of whom one has since died. Our brave tars, however, will be consoled in their sufferings by the booty they have acquired, the St. Raphael having on board 500,000 dollars, and to the value of 500,000 more in bars of copper. She sailed from Lima, and was bound to Manilla; and is said to be the ship, formerly called the Nancy Grab, which was built in this Country. Since her capture she was several times separated by bad weather from the Caroline, for a day or two together: how fortunate then it is that she was not retaken, but she should have arrived in safety in a British Port.

The Spanish Papers found on board the St. Raphael confirm the report from the Cape of the recapture of Buenos Ayres by the Spaniards, who came from Monte Video, with a force of 8,000 men, and landing about 60 miles from Buenos Ayres, obliged General Beresford (as we believe) and his troops to the amount of about 1500 men to surrender, having first surrounded the Citadel of which the General's small force composed the Garrison. The inhabitants of Buenos Ayres are admitted in the Spanish Papers, to have fallen down, and absolutely to have worshipped the English when they arrived there; and an apprehension arising from an insurrection of the Natives, and not any fear in meeting the English, is stated by the Spanish Commondant as his reason for not having staid with his troops to defend the place, on the arrival of Sir Home Popham and General Beresford. The Spaniards say it was very foolish in the English to attempt to retain the Colony, that they ought to have been satisfied with the plunder they obtained, and sent home on the Narcissus; but for a handful of men to expect to conquer the Spanish Dominions in South America was mere Quixotism. Notwithstanding their vast idea of their power in that quarter, we still hope that we may have to announce that Buenos Ayres, is in the possession of Sir Arthur Wellesley and the Companions of his Expedition.

The H. C. extra ship Sarah Christiana, Captain Makeson, which left her Bengal pilot on the 12th September and this port at the begining of October, with dispatches for England, touched at the Cape of Good Hope on the 25th December and sailed again for England on the same day.

Extract of a Letter from a Gentleman, who went on the Georgiana Packet, from St. Helena to Buenos Ayres, and arrived from thence in that ship at the Cape of Good Hope, the 24th Nov. last.

"CAPE TOWN, Decembet 24, 1806.

"You will be surprised to hear from me so soon, particularly so when I inform you, that we found the town of Beunos Ayres in the hands of the enemy; after leaving St Helena, September 17th, we steered for Beunos Ayres, and arrived off the town on the 19th October, we were seven days in going up the river Plata without seeing any vessel to communicate with, the only vessels we saw, were lying in Barragan Bay, about 20 miles below the town, on our arrival off the town, we saw a few small craft, with Spanish Ensigns flying, we got a ground about 11 a m. when in that situation we fired a gun and hoisted an English Jack at the fore, and Company's colours at the mizen peak, immediately a large launch came off from the shore to reconnoitre, but did not come within hail; the ship by press of sail got off the sand, we supposed that they mistook the Company's colours for American. A vessel under the town having hoisted American colours, upon seeing ours, we hauled down the Company's colours, and hoisted an English red Ensign, enforced with a gun to leeward, stood off and on the town till 3 p. m. but being afraid of grounding again, anchored off the town 7 or 8 miles. At 3 a. m. October 20th, Mr. Davis the third Officer, with four hands in the Jolly Boat, went on board a brig at anchor, about 4 miles off, to get a Pilot or some information about the state of the town, At 6 when the thick haze cleared away, we perceived a brig, two schooners, and a sloop coming down to us, with sweeps, prepared for action, loosed and set sails (little or no wind.) At 7, cut the cable and stood down the river, with a light air. At half past 7, the headmost schooner fired a ſhot, and hoiſted Spaniſh colours, as the reſt did as ſoon as their guns would reach, ſeveral ſhot paſſed between our maſts, others fell cloſe a head and aſtern. A ſhot cut the inner Bobſtay, bowſprit, ſhroud, and ſprit-ſail ſheet. We fired one of our long 12 pounders, but it fell ſhort. The breeze freſhened, and we drew faſt from them. About half paſt 9, they all ſtood in towards the town. At noon the veſſels in Barragan Bay, bore S. W. by S. 6 or 7 miles, one appeared a frigate, the reſt were unrigged, ſaw no other veſſels all down the river. A conſultation of the Officers was called, and it was agreed to ſteer for the Cape of Good Hope, where we arrived on the 24th November."

FORT WILLIAM,—March 5, 1807.

" General Orders, by the Commander in Chief, Head Quarters on board the Honorable Company's ſhip Walthamſtow, Saugar Road, 24th February, 1807.

" The Right Honorable Lord Lake having taken his departure from Fort William, for the purpoſe of returning to Europe, feels himſelf now called upon to perform the laſt act of public duty in his ſituation of Commander in Chief in India by recording his final teſtimony of the character and conduct of the Army of India, and of the Officers and Soldiers who have ſerved under his command.

" In attempting the diſcharge of that duty, his Lordſhip feels it difficult either to do juſtice to them, or to his own feelings, under the mixed ſenſations of pride and regret inſeparable from the occaſion of contemplating their merits and of bidding adieu to Officers and Men collectively and individually endeared to him by habits of intercourſe, and the mutual exertions of the ſpirit of profeſſional enterprize during the long period of ſix years, for the moſt part paſſed amidſt the viciſſitudes of Climate, and the laborious duties of the Field ; in the ſervice of their King and Country.

" The merits and the ſervices of the Army, and of all the Officers and troops, engaged in the late arduous War in India, have been ſo repeatedly and ſo emphatically expreſſed and recorded by the Supreme Government of the Britiſh poſſeſſions in Aſia ; and the gratitude and appaulſe of the Commander in Chief has been ſo frequently called forth to expreſs his admiration of the gallant ſpirit of enterprize and exertion of the Officers, the ſteady diſcipline and undaunted valour of the Troops, that the Commander in Chief feels any endeavour of his to add to their reputation, would only tend to leſſen its eſtimation in proportion as the attempt muſt fall ſhort of the praiſe which it deſerves.

" It therefore only remains for his Lordſhip to expreſs once more his moſt ſincere and hearty thanks for the diſtinguiſhed honor which he has derived from the gallant exertions and ſplendid ſucceſſes of the Britiſh Army in India, and to record the teſtimony which his perſonal obſervation and experience during the period of ſix years entitles him to pronounce, that the approbation which has been beſtowed on them has been moſt eminently deſerved, and that they have eſtabliſhed a juſt and undoubted claim to the beſt rewards which can be beſtowed on them by a grateful Government.

" The Commander in Chief feels, that to aſcribe any peculiar merit to the conduct by which the Officers and Soldiers, his countrymen, have been actuated beyond what might attach to their distinguished valour and noble perseverance during a long and arduous war, would be felt only as a negative compliment, but he finds it difficult to do justice to the merits of our Native Soldiers, who have encountered every danger with the most exemplary valour, who have submitted to every hardship and privation with the utmost fortitude and perseverance; and who to promote the cause in which they were engaged, have on many occasions made a cheerful and ready sacrifice of every habit and prejudice which they have been taught to regard as most dear and inviolable.

"If any weight can attach to his success, or any influence be derived from the acknowledged national benefits that have been justly ascribed to the fortitude and valour of the British Army in India, during the period of his command, the Commander in Chief will esteem it the greatest honour, and the highest gratification of his life, to employ that weight and influence in promoting the interests and exalting the character of that gallant army, to which he now subscribes his affectionate FAREWELL.

"The remainder of his days will be enlivened by the recollection of those public services which obtained for him the approbation of his King and country; and his Lordship will never cease to cherish the affectionate remembrance of the companions of his glory, and the promoters of his success, during the eventful period of his long command in India."

FORT WILLIAM,—Feb. 11, 1807.

General Orders, by the Honorable the Governor General in Council.

The death of Major General Smith, having occasioned a vacancy in the General Staff of his Majesty's service, allowed for the Presidency of Bengal; the Governor General in council is pleased to appoint Major General Dickens, of his Majesty's service, to the Staff of this Presidency, till further orders.

FORT WILLIAM,—Feb. 12, 1807.

General Orders by the Commander in Chief,

The Commander in Chief has received the report of the capture of the strong Fort of Chumeer, in the District of Kooneh at 4 P. M. on the 19th of Jan. 1807.

The energy and decision evinced by lieutenant colonel Hawkins, since he succeeded to the command in Bundlekund, is highly creditable to his professional reputation: and the judgement, ability and promptitude manifested by him in the attack of Chumeer, entitles lieutenant colonel Hawkins, to the particular approbation of the commander in chief.

The professional ability and zealous exertions displayed by captain Hopper, and the artillery, engineer and pioneer details employed on that service, in preparing the way; and the determined gallantry evinced in the assault of Chumeer, against a very spirited and desperate resistance, redounds highly to the honor of captain Delamain, of the 16th native infantry, who led the attack: and to that of the gallant Officers and Soldiers of his Majesty's and the honorable company's service, who so nobly performed their duty on that occasion, and for which all are entitled to his Lordship's particular praise and thanks.

The commander in chief laments the loss of lieutenant M'Gregor, of his Majesty's 17th foot, and of lieutenant M'Queen, of the 1st native infantry now numbered with those who have gallantly fallen in the services of their country.

General Orders by the Commander in Chief.

Fort William. February 17, 1807.

The departure for Europe of lieutennnt colonel Salkeld, quarter master general of the military establishment of Bengal, affords to the commander in chief an opportunity which he embraces with sincere pleasure for recording in the general orders of this army, the character and conduct of that officer, which his lordship with confidence recommends as an example worthy of being emulated by all who are following in the same career of military exertion and renown. From the commencement until the close of the late war, lieutenant colonel Salkeld filled one of the most important situations on the general staff of the army in the field, under his lordship's personal command; during which extended period, the unabating zeal, indefatigable and laborious exertion, and the active spirit of gallantry invariably manifested by him on all and every occasion, not only in the discharge of the arduous duties of the quarter master general's department, but on several other duties on which he was employed, and especially in the superintendance of the guide and intelligence departments, which required peculiar ability, temper and discernment; have not only established the pre-eminent claims of lieut. col. Salkeld to the highest praise, and the most grateful acknowledgments which the commander in chief can bestow; but also entitle him to the honor of having his name recorded with those of the most deserving and meritorious officers, who have zealously and faithfully served their country and the honorable company in this remote quarter of the globe.

Calcutta, March 4, 1807.

On Wednesday last, a Malay Christian, a Native of Manilla perpetrated the crime of murder, under the influence of that cool determined spirit of revenge, so peculiarly characteristic of this sanguinary race. The desperado in this case, having contracted a debt to a small amount, a complaint was preferred for its recovery in the Court of Requests, at the suit of two Native Portuguese women, who were the claimants. Judgment was given in their favour, and the defendant was sent to prison. After the expiration of two months, he was released. The first moment of regaining his liberty, was employed in carrying into effect the murderous design that he had planned against the parties at whose suit he had been imprisoned. He accordingly repaired to the dwelling of the two women, and obtaining a ready admittance, no sooner came within reach, then drawing his crease, he plunged the weapon at one thrust to the hilt in the breast of the first victim of his vengeance. The unfortunate woman fell, and instantly died on the spot. Such was the dispatch employed by this barbabarian, that the second woman had not sufficient time to escape. Seizing her by the hair of the head, he impelled his crease with such violence against the thorax, that it passed through the chest into the cavity of the abdomen. Notwithstanding the course and severity of this wound, it did not prove immediately fatal. The wretched sufferer was carried to the Native Hospital, where she still languishes without hope of recovery.

Having thus deeply imbrued his hands in blood, he determined to satiate his thirst of revenge by the murder of the Commissioner, who had passed the decree against him; and was proceeding to accomplish this part of his design, when he was fortunately secured by the Officers of Justice and lodged in goal.

G. O. BY GOVERNMENT.

Bombay Castle, 9th February, 1807.

The Records bear ample testimony to the high sense, which this Government entertained of the conspicuous merits of his Majesty's 77th regt. at the period of its transfer from this Presidency to that of Fort St. George, and being now on the eve of departure from India the honorable the Governor in Council, feels great satisfaction in referring to the Orders of Government dated 2d April 1800, and to have it in his power to add, that since the return of the 77th regiment to this Presideney their orderly conduct has heightened the favorable sentiments he formerly entertained of that distinguished and valuable corps; In reward to the long and faithful services of which, during a period of nearly twenty years in India the Officers are allowed to draw, three months full batta, previously to their embarkation.

Bombay Castle, 10th February, 1807.

Upon the occasion of the return to England of colonel Reynolds, the Governor in council feels a satisfaction in expressing his very favorable sense of that officer's long and distinguished services—Entering immediately after his arrival in India, in the year 1772, on active service, he continued during the course of the following year in the honorable discharge of his professional duties, including those of an Engineer, on the various Field operations of that period, against the Mahrattas and Tippoo Sultaun, from the reduction of Broach till the attacks on Dubboy in 1783, at which he was wounded, and thereafter on service, with General Goddard at the reduction of Ahmedabad, the Siege of Bassein, and the capture of Arnaul, and on the occasion of that General's memorable retreat from the Ghauts to Panwell, at which arduous crisis colonel Reynolds was attached to the rear guard of that army and was twice wounded, having subsequently proceeded in command of a detachment of six grenadier companies of native infantry to join general Mathews on the service of 1783-4 in the province of Canara, had thence the opportunity of bearing a very creditable share in the lengthened and gallant defence of Onore, which was not given up till the peace of 1784.

During the next hostilities with Tippoo Sultaun, colonel Reynolds was attached in the year 1792 to the Staff of the late major general Hartley, in the capacity of quarter master general and in the confidential charge of the Intelligence department; his able and useful services on which, gained to this meritorious officer, the approbation and thanks of that eminent Military commander and accomplished statesman, the late ever to be lamented Marquis Cornwallis.

Between the year 1784 and 1792, and since the conclusion of the Peace of Seringapatam, colonel Reynolds has in his official station of surveyor general, been chiefly engaged, by the extensive surveys of himself and native assistants in the sedulous acquisition and arrangement of the most accurate materials for the construction of a general map of India, on the most extensive scale, the result of which he is now returning to offer to his honorable employers and to his country, in a work that (to say the least of it) will for magnitude of conceptions, and extent of geographical information, be, if ever equalled, not easily surpassed.

Bombay Castle,—February 16, 1807.

Lieutenant Colonel Richard Doolan, having requested permission to retire from the Honorable Company's service on the Pay of his rank and having served the prescribed period, that entitles him to that indulgence, the Honorable the Governor in Council is pleased to accept of his resignation accordingly.

On the occasion of the return to Europe of Colonel Andrew Anderson, Government have much satisfaction, in noticing the length and meritoriousness of that Officer's Services. Colonel Anderson, was at the siege and capture of Taunah in the year 1774; on service in Guzerat under General Goddard in 1779-80, commanded the advanced Party at the Siege of, and his detachment formed part of the storming Party at Amedabad. He was on the Callian service with Captain, afterwards General Hartley in 1780, was on service in the Southern Districts betwixt Surat and Bassein, and while detached on the Frontiers at the Passes, took Danoo and Assowar Forts in 1781-2: conciliated the Jungle Dooblys, by which the Districts round Terrapore and Bulsaur were relieved from molestation.

He was in the Battle of the Black Rock under Colonel Dow in 1789-90, where he led the advanced Guard in attacking the enemy and the rear Guard in retireing from the Field—was at the taking of Cannanore under General Abercromby in 1790, was at the siege and capture of Cochin under Colonel Petrie in 1795, and in the same year was wounded in pursuing a party of predatory Moplas; commanded for a time in Coteote in 1797, on the service agaist the rebels in that country where he was actively employed—Took Parneira Fort in the Monsoon of 1803, was on duty a considerable time on the frontier of the Attavesy, 1803 where he acted successfully in the conciliation of the Beel Chieftains, who agreed to serve the Honorable Company when called on, and who subsequently proved useful when supplies were forwarded from Surat to Galna for the use of the army in the Deccan, and finally he is desirous of returning to his Native country after a service of 32 years as an officer, without interruption and without furlough, on which several points of view, this experienced able officer will be recommended to the attention of his honorable employers.

February 19, 1807.

Captain William Green, of the Bombay European regiment, having produced the prescribed certificates, has the permission of the honorable the governor in council to proceed to Europe on furlough, for the recovery of his health, by the departing ships.

In consequence of the permission thus granted to captain Green, the governor in council has much satisfaction, in noticing the very favourable report by lieut. general Nicolls; of this officer's services, in the station of Town-major, during the period of the lieutenant general's charge and immediate command of the garrison, which recorded testimony of approbation, is unreservedly joined in, by the honorable the governor, who has during the whole period that captain Green has filled the station in question, had the fullest reason to be gratified with his able, and attentive discharge of its several functions, from which, it is with sincere regret that he sees this officer now obliged from ill health to retire.

February 26, 1807.

Lieutenant General Nicolls having embarked on the Ganges on his intended return to England with the Permission of Government (as was sanctioned on the departure of Lieutenant General Stuart) not to resign the command of the army or his seat in council till the departure of the ship from the last rendezvous station, in India, it is hereby announced that General Orders will in the mean time be published by the Governor in Council and communicated to the army through the Department of the Adjutant General.

All applications from Officers within the Province of Guzerat, including Surat and its dependencies as well as from the Poonah Subsidiary force, Goa, and all out Posts will reach Government through the channel of commanding officers of ſtations, who will tranſmit them to the Adjutant General for the information and decision of Government.

THE JEWS.

ALTONA, August 16.

The following letter has been written to the Emperor Napoleon, by M. Jacobson, Agent of Finances to the Court of Brunswick:—

"Sire—Penetrated with sentiments of the most profound veneration, and filled with that admiration, which those extraordinary men always excite, who, at different periods, are chosen by the Eternal to ennoble the human race, I approach your Majesty's throne with all that confidence the great actions with which you have caused the astonished world to resound, are calculated to inspire.

"I have not the happiness to be numbered among the people for whose advantage you sacrifice all the moments of your life. I belong not to that happy country to which you have called back peace. I am one of the unfortunate Jewish people against whom ignorance and superstition have leagued, in order to degrade them and render them the opprobrium of every other nation; but the Lord of Host hath chosen you to give happiness to the world, and the Jews are a part of that world. I belong to that people, whose misery has for more than 1000 years in vain implored the compassion and the humanity of Sovereigns—to that people who expected in you their Saviour, and who in you, Sire, have found him!

"I have constantly endeavoured to promote the happiness of my countrymen by civilizing them; and my efforts have been crowned with the happiest success. I have at last been able to interest several of the German Princes in favour of the Jewish people. I have obtained for my unfortunate brethren the abolition of an infamous tax I have established, at my own expence, an institution for the instruction of Jewish children, and in which there are at present more than twenty Christian children. Now, however, I place no limits to my hopes, since I have the happiness to raise my suppliant voice to the throne of your Majesty.

"Deign, Sire, to extend your beneficent views to the Jews who inhabit the countries adjoining to your vast empire. If you confine your benefits to that part of my brethren who are among your Majesty's subjects, how much will still remain to be desired! How will it be possible to surmount the obstacles which the difference of the French Administration, and that of other States, will place between them and us?—The commercial relations of France and Germany require a constant intercourse between the Jews of these countries; but what Jew, inhabiting your States, would degrade the title of French citizen, by the humiliations and vexations which the system of administration in Germany would make him experience? Would he choose his spouse among a people rendered infamous by the laws of the country they inhabit?

"How great and sublime is the interprise of breaking the chains of a people unjustly oppressed! Who but a God can harken to their complaints and deliver them from an insupportable bondage!

"The Princes of Germany do not oppose the accomplishment of this grand work; on the contrary, it is the object of their wishes. They are anxious to ameliorate our condition We groan under the operation of ancient laws dictated by barbarism, and which prejudice only could have maintained until the present day.

"The German Jew would be happy were he permitted to earn his bread honestly, to enjoy the common right of protection which governments owe to their subjects; and were there given to his worship a practical form, which, without deviating from his own law, would accord with the exercise of all the duties of citizenship.

"But to attain this object it would be necessary,

"1. To establish a Sovereign Jewish Council, presided by a Patriach residing in France.

"2. To class all the persons professing the Jewish faith according to the districts they inhabit, with a Synod to each, which, under the superintendence of the French Government and the Sovereign Jewish Council, should decide on all affairs connected with worship, and should appoint the Rabbis.

3. "To authorize the said Sovereign Council to supply each Jew with the necessary expences for enabling him to fulfil the duties of a citizen in every country.

"These means, Sire, appear equally certain and indispensable, only break the political and ecclesiastical chains which confine the Jews to a state of slavery, and you will soon see them aspire to the dignified character of other nations. Then shall we emulate our ancestors, who changed the barren rocks of Palestine into delightful gardens, and covered them with the richest harvests. Then shall we be worthy of bearing the same name as those heroes who planted their victorious standards on the banks of the river Jordan, with the same hand, with which they guided the plough and shuttle."

PARLIAMENT HOUSE.

The appearance of Old-Palace Yard, in the course of a few weeks, will again be totally changed. The front of the range of buildings recently erected as an appendage to the house of Lords is partly taken down, in order that the whole shall be rebuilt, or fronted, in the Gothick style to correspond with the venerable fabric opposite. A range of arcades, or piazzas, is to run along the bottom, from the new gothic portico now erecting, as the principal entrance to both houses, viz.—at the gateway leading to cotton garden as far as the door or portico through which his Majesty goes to the house of Lords on royal state days; and a new entrance very near the gothic portico, above described, is making from Old Palace Yard to the Courts of Law, &c. in Westminster-Hall, which will be the general mode of ingress and egress, until the projected improvements in Westminster-Hall shall be finished. These alterations and improvements are at the express desire and agreeably to the taste of his Majesty, and will be completed before the meeting of Parliament.

Clerical Arithmetic.—Sixteen Welch Curates make a rector; ten rectors, a pluralist; five pluralists, a dean, four deans, a bishop; and two bishops, an Archbishop.

GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGES.

The lady who was tried for bigamy at the Surry Assizes had a very narrow escape, from the circumstance of her prosecutor not being prepared to prove the validity of Gretna Green marriages. The Scotch Court has determined, on a hundred occasions, that, without any ceremony whatever, the parties living and cohabiting as man and wife, and declaring themselves such, is as binding as the most formal marriage, although it subjects them to penalties. They have held also, that a promise of marriage, with subsequent consummation, is equivalent to marriage itself; nay, in a case about ten years ago, they decided, that the man having by letters and otherwise declared the woman his wife, made her so to all intents and purposes, though it was proved that the marriage was never consummated.—In May, 1767, the validity of Scotch marriages was determined by Dr. Hay in the Court of Arches. In that case a gentleman of fortune carried a young lady under age to Scotland, where they were married in a private house (it is not stated whether it was by a clergyman,) but it is without a licence or proclamation of banns. The Judge was clearly of opinion that this was good in law, and that marriages in Scotland do not come within the Act of Parliament of 1754, to prevent clandestine marriages. This decision was afterwards confirmed by the Court of Delegates. We make these observations, the rather because we observe it has been improperly stated in several papers, that the case at Guildford settled the point that Gretna Green marriages are not binding, whereas the lady was here acquitted solely for want of evidence of what is the law of Scotland.

GENERAL MIRANDA.

The advocates of Miranda place much confidence in the result of his expedition, from the insurgent disposition of the different tribes of indians who inhabit Venezuela, Maracaybo, and Cummana.—They are described as intolerably lazy, ignorant, cruel, and always ready to take the part of invaders. They often quarrel among themselves, and are so vindictive and ferocious in their contests, that they use poisoned arrows, murder the prisoners taken in battle, and frequently devour them. Except the Caribs, who inhabit the banks of the Oroonoko, they never openly attack their enemies, and as they are too poor to afford any incitement to plunder, their wars seem to be carried on only for the purpose of murder and devastation. Lopez De Gomora, and subsequently M. De Pons, have furnished many curious particulars of these tribes, who, it appears, have been visited by Missionaries in the pay of Miranda, and have offered their assistance.

BRITISH NEPTUNE.—SEPTEMBER 1.

We ſtate with great regret, that accounts have been received at Liverpool of the dreadful ravages of the Yellow Fever, which has again broken out at NEW YORK. This information has ſpread ſo much conſternation amongſt the ſhipping, that all thoſe veſſels which were bound to that port have changed their voyage.

Goriza and Gradiſca, in the Auſtrian Frioli, were occupied by the French on the 22d ult. They took poſſeſſion in the name of the King of ITALY, and required the public officers to take the oath of fidelity to that Sovereign. Thoſe who refuſed were diſmiſſed, Frenchmen were ſubſtituted in their place, and ſeveral were impriſoned! This new organization was effected in a few days. The military preparations in the Auſtrian Monarchy are without foundation.

We have at length a French account of the action between the Phoſphorus fire-brig and the French privateer the Eglé, Capt. Henin, off the Iſle of Wight, about a fortnight ſince. The French veſſel had ſixteen guns, and men in proportion; the Engliſh only four; yet the French Captain acknowledges that he had two men killed and ten mortally wounded! The gallant Lieutenant HUGES, who ſo bravely defended himſelf againſt a force more than four to one, had only ſeven men beſides himſelf, ſlighly wounded. In attempting to conceal the diſgrace of being defeated by ſo trifling a number, we are told, that in the boarding the crews of the reſpective veſſels even fought with [illegible]ir fiſts! This is a pretty candid acknowledgment of the inv[illegible] ſuperiority of Engliſhmen, when they could thus beat five (pe[illegible]aps ſix or ſeven) to one, even with their fiſts. After this affair, who will doubt that one Engliſhman is not, as formerly, equal to three Frenchmen?

Who will dare to ſay our Country impoveriſhed by the expences of a war, although a poor income of 100l. a year pays 10l. tax, when 200,000l. is exepended in a ſtable! Various are the comments on this; ſome compare our modern luxury to that of a certain Roman Emperor, who built an ivory manger for his horſe, and fed him with oats in a golden cup; while others ſay it is built for the ſake of a favourite Old Grey Mare.

Three hundred poor ſoldiers arrived at Woodbridge, in Suffolk, on Wedneſday morning on their way from Holland. They belong to the 5th Regiment of Foot, caſt away on the Dutch coaſt in December laſt, where they remained priſoners for eight months. They ſay that on Bonaparte's brother being made King of Holland he discharged all prisoners of war. Their appearance is truly pitiable, most of them bare headed and barefooted, and the account they gave of their food while prisoners is shocking.

The population of Goriza and Gradisca, in the Friuli, which the French have seized, and to which the mines of quicksilver belong, at Idria, is estimated at 14,000 souls.

Some censure has been directed against the University of Cambridge, because it is said that the Statue of GLORY is to be removed to make room for that of Mr. PITT.

The Confederation of the Rhine puts eight millions of Germans under the protection of France.

The Temple at Paris contained lately among others prisoners, Count de Vaubau. He had once joined the colours of the Royalists, not from duty, but because he had been proscribed by the Republicans. From compassion and generosity Louis XVIII. and his Royal Brother relieved his necessities, though they did not confide in his fidelity. An intriguer and unprincipled, in prison as well as in society, he last year offered to Fouche to write a libel on the House of Bourbon, as the price of his liberty, and a pension from the House of Bonaparte. De Vaubau, wrote, was free, and paid. But either his disgraceful libel was too clumsy to impose even on the French or Bonaparte resolved to chastise the traitor after profiting by his treachery. Three weeks ago the libeller was again arrested, Upon his complaint of Bonaparte's want of gratitude, Fouche replied, "Justice with Napoleon always precedes his gratitude. You have attempted both to dishonour and to injure, those who have been your benefactors for years; what security can the Emperor have that you may not one day leave your pen for a dagger? A calumniator easily becomes an assassin. You are too dangerous a subject any where but in a dungeon."

It now decided by Government, that, in addition to the many commendable reductions already made, the expensive and almost sinicure situations of Military Superintendents of Hospitals are to be entirely done away.

THE TRAVELLER.—SEPTEMBER I.

The colours taken from Tippoo Saib, at the storming of Seringapatam, were brought home by the Marquis Wellesley, and presented, by his Lordship, to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, who have ordered them to be hung up in their Chapel, at Popular Hospital, for the inspection of the public.

If this country were at present to co-operate with Pruſſia againſt France, the conteſt would prove of a ſingularly anomalous nature. France would be at war with Pruſſia to compel her to give up Hanover to the King of Great Britan; and we, who wiſh that electorate to be reſtored to its lawful ſovereign, would be aiding the King of Pruſſia, who ſeeks to retain Hanover, and incorporate it with his other dominions.

A contention, it ſeems, has ariſen between the King of Bavaria and the Archbiſhop of Primate, relative to the ſpoils which aroſe in conſequence of the abdication of the Emperor of Germany. The imperial Crown, which was kept at Nuremberg, and the other imperial inſignia, which have been preſerved at Frankfort, have been claimed by the King: but the demand, as far as regards the latter portion of the Regalia, has been conteſted by the Archbiſhop. It is ſuppoſed the fiat of Bonaparte will decide the controverſy.

The improvements of a noble Duke in Privy Gardens ſeem carried on upon ſome principle of fortification. A high wall was run up at firſt; but this being objected to as contrary to the general improvement, it was taken down, and a ſecond dwarf wall has been formed behind it: both of them are now covered with broad flat ſtones, ſo that what his Grace has loſt in height he has gained in thickneſs Very formidable preparations are likewiſe making on each ſide of the intended new entrance, and a lodge is erecting within the gate-way, which the wits have already denominated the outer Fort.

According to the ſtatement of the Britiſh naval force up to Saturday, there are at preſent in commiſſion 131 ſhips of the line, 11 fifties, 169 frigates, 184 ſloops, and 259 gunbrigs, &c. compriſing in the whole 745 ſhips of war, excluſive of hired armed veſſels, &c.

The ſubſcriptions for the relief of the poor ſufferers in Germany amount to 17,779l. 10s. 4d. of which, the ſum of 15,190l. has been remitted to that country.

A Frenchman named Frenaye, was lately put on board a priſon-ſhip in Port Royal harbour, for refuſing to enliſt for the defence of the iſland, ſaying that he would not carry arms againſt his countrymen. This fellow and his family were ſaved about three years ago from the maſſacre at St. Domingo, and have ever ſince received the protection of the Britiſh Government.

A Money-lender advertiſes to do buſineſs in two hours. There is no extraordinary expedition in that—a pickpocket would do it in a ſecond.

Mr. Abraham Goldſmid has purchaſed the principal part of the eſtate of the late gallant Lord Nelſon, which was put to the hammer a few days ago. It was ſold for about 72l. per acre.

Admiral Linois' progreſs of cure of the ſevere wound he received on his capture, has fulfilled the expectations hoped for. The wound in the calf of the leg is nearly healed, his foot almoſt flat on the ground, and he is capable of walking with the aid of an arm, or one crutch. Application has been made to the Tranſport Board for a further leave that he may remain at Bath till his cure is complete.

Sir John Cutler, the miſer, uſed to thank Heaven that he was born on the 29th of February, becauſe he was then only put to the expence of keeping his birth day every fourth year.

The Moniteur has publiſhed a ſketch of the hiſtory of the Jews, from Moſes to the preſent time. In the execution of this work, the writer examines particularly into the cauſes of their diſperſion, and the maxims and laws in their policy and legiſlation which have contributed to preſerve them an iſolated body in every country where they reſide. It is evidently intended for the purpoſe of preparing the way for the new ſyſtem which Bonaparte means to eſtabliſh for that claſs of people.

THE TRAVELLER.—SEPTEMBER 2.

We regret to ſay that the Portugueſe Government has given orders for the ſhutting up of Porto Franco (the Free Port) in the Tagus, allowing only eighteen months for the diſpoſal and reſhipment of goods now depoſited there. It is poſſible that Government may have been aware of the intention of iſſuing an order of this kind, the effects of which muſt be very ſenſibly felt by the trade of this country, and that the Britiſh ſquadron now in the Tagus was ſent there to prevent it. The order, however, has been given; and, if it has not been extorted from the Portugueſe Government by ſome menace from France, the former will have little claim upon the protection or forbearanee of this country.

A Lady's Maid advertiſes that "ſhe is a perfect miſtreſs of all the ſecrets of the toilet; and that ſhe can tranſlate nods and winks!"

An elderly Lady, expreſſing her ſurpriſe at the preſent faſhions, obſerved that there was now no diſplay of dreſs, as the coſtume of the preſent day only tended to ſhew the ſhape, and wondered that the Ladies ſhould have relinquiſhed their former habiliments of brocade, for muſlin dreſſes like tinder. A Gentleman remarked that was probably done with a view to catch the ſparks.

Such is the vigour and vigilance of the present Board of Admiralty that no less than EIGHT squadrons, each of superior force, actually are cruizing or lying wait for the enemy. The following is the disposition of this formidable force:—

1. Nine sail of the line, under Sir C. COTTON, off Brest.
2. Six ditto, under Commodore KEATS, off Belleisle.
3. Six ditto, under Admiral HARVEY, off Cape Finisterre.
4. Six ditto, under Commodore HOOD, off Rochefort.
5. Five ditto, under Sir R. STRACHAN.
6. Six ditto, under Sir J. WARREN.
7. Six do. sailed from Plymouth last week under Admiral LOUIS, and
8. Four or five sail of the line under Earl ST. VINCENT, in the Tagus.

Besides a squadron off Cadiz, and two others in the Mediterranean.

On Thursday evening orders were received at Plymouth to stop the sailing of that part of the expedition which is called the secret one.

On Friday the Honorable Captain GREY arrived at Portsmouth, and entered upon his office as Commissioner of the Navy for that Dock Yard, in the room of Sir CHARLES SAXTON, who has retired.

It is determined to send all the incomplete second battalions to Ireland, Jersey, or Guernsey, there to be completed by recruiting or by drafts from the Irish militia; the second battalions which have been completed to be moved on to service.

A letter from Hamburgh, August 19, states—"Our Correspondent from Paris, of the 11th, mention the appointment of the learned FORTADO, as President of Jewish Assembly, and of his two Secretaries, to the Legion of Honour, by a decree in the handwriting of his Majesty the EMPEROR and KING himself. The former has been dignified with the Great Cross of the Order.

A new Quarantine Board is about to be established, of which the Comptroller of the Navy for the time being will be President. The Commissioners appointed are, two Commissioners of the Customs, Commissioner GEORGE, of the Transport Office, with Dr. HARNESS, of the same office, and two or thee other medical gentlemen.

In one of the western counties it was lately proposed to repair a church; the parishioners, however, requested that it might be rebuilt, alledging that they found by experience, the latter proceeding would be the least expensive!

MURAUT, in his History of Essex, says, "that Gentlemen should never go to law about oyster beds, as the Lawyers would only leave them the shells."

THE STAR.—SEPTEMBER 3.

A number of Russian children are christened every year in the depth of winter. A hole for this purpose is made through the ice on the river Neva; the child is handed to the priest, and if in the immersion, through the numbness of his hands, it should slip through, he raises his head as if nothing happened, and quietly says, "Give me another, for God has taken that to himself!"

Accounts from Rome, dated August 7, mention, that the Commissary General of the Holy Inquisition had proceeded against a female, named Christini Conti who pretended to be favoured with heavenly visions of JESUS CHRIST, the Virgin, St Joseph, and had published several predictions. She has been sent to the prison of the Holy Office, and is ordered to be confined as long as the Inquisition shall think proper.

THE COURIER.—SEPTEMBER 4.

ARRIVALS FROM INDIA.

The following is a list of the passengers in the ships which arrived on Tuesday from the East Indies:—

THE EXPEDITION.

Extract of a letter from an officer on the staff with the troops at Plymouth.

"PLYMOUTH, Sept. 1.

"Orders were yesterday received to disembark the troops, and the wooden-bottomed transports in consequence moved into Stonehouse Pool in the evening, and this morning the rest of the transports with the troops on board are following them. It is now 12 o'clock. The transports are all in the Pool, and the artillery are disembarking —From the orders, you will see that the army, or a part of it, is likely to go into camp. The men are in the highest health and spirits, and both soldiers and officers will be most seriously disappointed if they shall be prevented from enjoying the opportunity of signalizing themselves abroad. The whole army is to be encamped (except the artillery) at a place called Buckland Down, about four miles from Dock.

BELL'S WEEKLY MESSENGER—SEPT. 6.

The conduct of the Portuguese to our Government is such as we should think would excite the indignation of his Majesty's Ministers.——That Government proceeded so far as to order an embargo on one of his Majesty's ships of the line.——We shall call it atrocity, because the Government of Portugal has no existence but as it is supported by the British alliance. Yet as it is become a system to insult our flag. Our merchantmen on the Brazil coast daily experience such treatment as need not be known to excite the public resentment.

How long must we submit to this ingratitude from the most contemptible Power in Europe.

FOUCHE, who has been so long at the head of the Police at Paris, is to be created a Duke.

Respecting an affair of a most tender, interesting, and momentous nature, nothing particular has transpired. The Hon. Committee, appointed by his Majesty to the investigation, have performed their sacred office, and delivered in their evidence. Of the Lady's perfect innocence, no being intertains a doubt. How well has Shakespear vindicated her cause—and how apt the following extract is to the present circumstances!—

Friar—Hear me a little——
——Call me a fool;
Trust not my reading nor my observations,
——Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here,
Under some biting error.
Leonato—Friar, it cannot be.
Friar—Lady, what man is he you are accused of?
Lady—They know that do accuse me; I know none.
If I know more of any man alive,
Than that which wedded modesty doth warrant,
Let all my sins lack mercy! O my father,
Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmeet—refuse me, hate me,
Torture me to death.

Benedict—Think you in your soul the Count Claudio hath wrong'd the lady?
Beatrice—Yea, as sure as I have a thought or soul.

Lord LAUDERDALE, it is said, is to succeed the Duke of GORDON as Keeper of the Great Seal in Scotland, the stated salary of which is 3000l.

Charles Stewart Corry, of Bailiborough, and C. Coote, Esqs. of Bellamont Forest, are, we hear, to declare themselves candidates r the county Cavan.

MANSION HOUSE.—1st September.

A gigantic and eccentric Hibernian ſeamen, named Gough, who had been taken into cuſtody by the peace officers on Friday, for riotous conduct, breaking windows, and raiſing a mob oppoſite to the Eaſt India Houſe, was brought up from the Poultry Compter, where he had been in durance, to anſwer for his conduct, and ſay what ſurety he could give to keep the peace, if he was now liberated. He anſwered, " the devil a peace he wanted to break at all at all, if the people who made ſuch a noiſe about the peace would let him alone in peace and quietneſs, and not be inſulting him, or making game of his country."

The Magiſtrate told him he thought it would be better to let him remain where he was until Monday, when his temper would be leſs ruffled, and his mind more cool. To which he anſwered " that the devil a ruffle he wiſhed to wear on his temper, and as to coolneſs, he was as cool as a cowcomer; and no wonder for him to be cool; for the devil burn the bit he had eat, ſince he had the honor of ſeeing his Lordſhip laſt, but bread and water."

The Magiſtrate told him he was ſtill confident it would be better for him to remain a few days. To which he anſwered, he hoped his honor did not mean to ſend him back to that ſhabby, hungry place where he was; for ſure, he did not think, that a man, like him, could live upon three-half pence worth of bread in a day. All he wanted was to go home to Northend, where he lodged, to get clean linen; but if his Worſhip would lend him a clean shirt, and ſend him a right ſort of a dinner to-day and to-morrow, he had no objection to ſtay till Monday.

The Magiſtrate then aſked him if he would go on board the Enterprize Tender? To which he anſwered, " ſure he was there already, for a whole night, double ironed, handcuffed, and gagged, for only damning the King and Government; and how could he help it, when a blackguard preſs-gang almoſt cut him to pieces, in the name of the King and Government? He had no occaſion to go on board the Enterprize, when he only wiſhed to go into the ſervice in a ſhip he knew, the Salvador del Mundo, at Plymouth, where he was well known to the officers. He had juſt come from India in a Company's ſhip.

The Magiſtrate told him he was his friend, though, perhaps, he did not know it; and only wiſhed to keep him out of harm's way. He looked like an honeſt fellow; and if he would promiſe not to get tipſey, or break any windows, or ſtrike any perſon, but go directly out of town, he would liberate him.

To this he anſwered, " Very poſſible his Worſhip migh be his friend, though, to be ſure, he had a d——d odd way of ſhewing it. Perhaps his Worſhip was one of his own trade: he was a cabinet-maker born, and ſo was his father before him, and both were reared among the chips. If he had kept the fifth Commandment, he need not be there now, nor any where elſe either; as to getting tipſey, devil a ſpoonfull he would drink till he left town, if all the water in London was turned into liquor; nor a window would he break. His honor was pleaſed to ſay he looked like an honeſt fellow. No wonder for him to be an honeſt fellow, God Almighty wrote it upon his forehead. But as to ſtriking any body he had more regard for his own health, for he was a double-jointed man, and if he ſtruck any man a blow with his fiſt, he would knock the brains out of his head, if he had any brains in it."

The Magiſtrate, upon his ſolemn promiſe to be quiet and leave town immediately, ordered him be diſcharged.

A Lady arrived yeſterday in town from Verdun, where ſhe has been a priſoner ever ſince the Belle packet was taken, on board of which ſhe was a paſſenger. She ſtates, that ſince the negociation has commenced, the priſoners in general are treated more liberally; and that all paſſengers, as well as many others can obtain paſſports to return home without much difficulty.

Our Calabrian Allies have certainly one recommendation in their favor, beyond the claims of ſome great ſtates in Europe with whom we are in the habit of making alliances. They ſupplied our ſoldiers with proviſions, and refuſed our money. There are very few ſpots in the Continent where this would happen.

The fate of Santerre, the Pariſian Brewer, once a General, and remarkable for his diſloyal and brutal conduct at the murder of Louis XVI. is not likely to excite much pity. Hitherto, however, it is merely confined to the ſequeſtration of his property, for the benefit of his creditors. Juſtice has not yet, it is to be hoped, done with this Ex-general and Patriot. It may be thought that the Emperor ought to do ſomething for him. His aſſiſtance in murdering the King, unqueſtionably, was of ſome uſe in paving the way to the acceſſion of Napoleon, but moſt probably he will take no notice of him; and the turbulent Pariſian Brewer may end his days in the bitter reflection that his "uſes of this life" have been "ſtale, flat and unprofitable!"

Extraordinary Melon.—On the 10th inſt. Mr. Biggar, gardiner to the Right Hon. Lord Douglas cut a Cantaloupe Melon, in his Lordſhip's garden, at Bothwell Caſtle, Scotland, which weighed 18lb. 10 oz. and meaſured $32\frac{3}{4}$ inches in diameter, and $36\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length.

POLICE.

GUILDHALL.

A full grown, well dreſſed, and very gentlemanlike lady, named Baſſet, who would certainly have carried the prize at any ſhow of female magnitude, in Leiceſterſhire, Woburn, or elſewhere, was charged by a Mrs. Boon, the wife of a publican, who keeps the ſign of the Roſe, in the Old Bailey, with very diſorderly and riotous behaviour, breaking her bar windows, demoliſhing ſeveral bottles of her reviving cordials, and aſſaulting her huſband on the preceding night.

It appeared that Mrs. Baſſet, who attired herſelf on Thurſday evening in her converſation bonnet, ſnow-white gown, and rich black lace, Spaniſh cloak, for a viſit to the cheerful ſhrine of St. Bartholomew, in Smithfield, had gone thither with a few friends; and having loſt, or being loſt by them in the fair, on her return homewards, ſhe called in at the ſign of the Roſe, to revive her exhauſted ſpirits with juſt a drop or two of Queen's Cordial. But Mrs. Boon, ſeeing the lady rather full blown, and in high colour and fragrance already from the ptyſan ſhe had taken at the fair, did not chuſe to comply with her wiſhes. Upon which Mrs. Baſſet, in the language of the Old Bailey "nabbed the ruſt;" inſiſted upon ſome liquor; would not quit the houſe without it, and began to blow up the hoſteſs, and blaſt the Roſe. Mr Boon, good man, "who did not like to have none af that ere piece of work," endeavoured, by a little gentle force, to urge Mrs. Baſſet into the open air; upon which ſhe faced about, tipt him a Belcher in the beſt eye, and then darted her other fiſt through the bar window up to her ſhoulder, demoliſhing bottles, glaſſes, and cordials, altogether amounting to 23s.

Mrs Baſſet, in her vindication, ſaid, ſhe only went into the houſe to take ſhelter from the rain, and that Boon inſiſted ſhe ſhould not ſtay there, as ſhe had no money to ſpend; that he had turned her out, torn her cloak, knocked her into the kennel and ſent her to the Compter. This ſtory, however, being diſproved except the Compter part, Mrs. Baſſet was ordered to pay the damages, to which, with great reluctance, ſhe conſented, and was diſmiſſed.

CURIOUS ACCUSATION.—At the Dundall Aſſizes, Henry Rob was indicted for aſſaulting and committing a rape on the body of Judith Collins. When ſhe appeared to proſecute, ſhe depoſed, that ſhe knew the priſoner very well, and being aſked if he was any relation of her's, ſhe anſwered, HE WAS HER HUSBAND!—Acquitted.

THE BONAPARTE FAMILY.

The following list of the relatives of Bonaparte is given in the French Imperial Almanack for the present year. It does not indeed contain the whole of that respectable family, but only includes those whom the great Napoleon, at the time of its publication, was graciously pleased to own. Lucien Bonaparte, who has been long in disgrace, is not mentioned, and Jerome, whose recent cruize has called him into notice in this country, was also then out of favour, and is of course omitted. It will be seen that the birth day of the Veceroy of Italy is not stated. We are merely informed that he was born in the year 1782.

THE JEWS.

Letters, we underſtand, have been receeived from certain Jew Bankers at Bayonne, which throw ſome light on the views of the Emperor of the French, with reſpect to their nation. He propoſes to re-eſtabliſh the Jewiſh Church, at Jeruſalem, in its ancient ſplendour, at the expence of the French Government. To take poſſeſſion of the Holy Land, and ſell it to the rich Jews of France, who are to force the intenerant Jews and pedlars to retire there, on an allotment of land being given them To appoint a Viceroy from among their nation, and ancient Jew titles of Prince, &c &c. are to be revived among theſe rich bankers. He reſerves alſo the power of ſending there all ſuch Jews as are offenders on the ſcore of uſury, &c. &c.—This is the ſubſtance of what is to take place very ſoon: it has met with the approbation of a great many of the Jewiſh Aſſembly, now ſitting at Paris, who are flattering themſelves with the high titles they are to poſſeſs, and indulging themſelves with the pleaſant proſpect of having their temples reſtored; while others of the Aſſembly have proteſted againſt it, as impracticable and deluſive,

THE LONDON PACKET.—September 8.

The Imperial Ukaſe, by which the new levy of recruits is ordered, which make the Ruſſian Armies near 600,000ſtrong, is inſerted in the Court Gazette of the 12th. The Emperor, in the parole on the 12th, ordered the forming of eleven additional regiments of infantry, ſix of dragoons, and as many of rangers. The ſame Court Gazette alſo contains the particulars of the capture of Derbent in Perſia, by the Ruſſian army.

The warlike operations of Auſtria, though conducted with ſuch aſtoniſhing reſerve have been vigorous beyond example, There is not a ſingle regiment but what is at preſent filled beyond its complement, and a conſiderable Auſtrian force has lately encamped below Paſſau

A courier from St. Peterſburgh arrived a few days ſince at Vienna, with a letter from Alexander to Francis II. who immediately had a conference with the Miniſters of ſtate, at which Count Colloredo, the new Preſident of the Council of War, aſſiſted.

The French have given Calabria, in conſequence of the reſiſtance of its brave inhabitants, the appellation of the Vendee of Italy.

The Iſland of Cuba ſtill continues a receptacle for the enemy's privateers. There were no leſs than 15 lying there in June, and many others were fitting out.

At the late Stafford Assizes, Mr. D. in cross-examing a simple country-lad, asked him if he did not know how much money such a person had in his pocket when he went from home? "No, Sir," said the lad. "Look at me, Sir," said the Counsel, "you are upon your oath; will you say that you did not know?"—"Yes, Sir."—"Now," said the lad, "look at me, Sir; can you tell how much money I've got in my pocket?"

A girl is exhibiting in Yorkshire with two tongues. He will indeed be a bold man who will take the damsel as his wife.

A letter received by the last Lisbon Mail, says, "It appears that Earl St. Vincent had great difficulty in getting an audience of either the Prince of Brazil or his Minister; and it was not until he had been in Lisbon five days that he had any communication with them."

The Emperor Napoleon, with that stretch of thought which overlooks no means of carrying on his great scheme of universal domination, by secret sap as well as by open assault, is perfectly aware of the use which may be made of the Jews in the rich countries to which he has turned his covetous eye. He is well aware of the influence of the Jews in Poland, in Hungary, at Constantinople, at Smyrna, Aleppo, and in all the neighbouring countries, where the people are too indolent to act for themselves. In his idea of stimulating commerce, and erecting a marine on his newly acquired shores in the Adriatic, &c. He wishes to arouse and to employ all the capital, skill, and industry of the Jews in the countries to which his new nursery of seamen may extend, in order to promote his great object. Never was plan better devised. The most productive countries upon earth, rich in every material, both of use and luxury, remote, and almost secure from the interruption of his most dreaded rival—and hitherto unexplored and unimproved, would by this means be made the sources of wealth and strength to France.

The Hamburgh paper, called The Correspondenten, of the 22d of August, has omitted for the first time, the words that were before always placed at the head of it.—"With the most gracious Imperial privilege."

FROM THE FRENCH PAPERS.

NAPLES, AUG. 12.

General Regnier has formed a junction with general Massena, at Cassano and Castrovillari, after having both of them entirely purged the provinces which they marched through of rebels.

The King returned on Friday to Naples, after being absent four days on his journey to Calabria. On Sunday he ſet out to rejoin the diviſion of the army which he commands in perſon, and which is encamped at Vetri and St. Laurent. The diſembarkation which the enemy hoped to effect has failed.

Ulterior Calabria having better reſiſted the inſtigation of the chiefs of the revolt and Engliſh than Hither Calabria, will be treated with more mildneſs. The inſurgents have been puniſhed —Among other towns Carigliano was delivered to the flames in ſpite of the efforts of the French generals to ſave it. The rebels have been abandoned by the Engliſh, and by thoſe who cauſed the inſurrection. The junction of Generals Maſſena, Regnier, and Verdier, will leave nothing to the enemy but the remorſe of having ſeduced the poor Calabrians, and occaſioned their ruin.

It is ſaid, that of 30,000 French, which were on their route, for Naples by way of Ancona, 20,000 have received orders to ſtop and retrogade their march.

NAPLES, AUG. 7.—A few days ago Joſeph Napoleon viſited Gaeta, to aſcertain the real ſtate of the place, and to give the neceſſary inſtructions for re-building the houſes that were deſtroyed during the ſiege. The miniſter of general Police has iſſued a decree, ordering that all the arms, and every other mark diſtinctive of the ancient Dynaſty, ſhould be taken down in 24 hours; at the ſame time that every individual decorated with the orders of St. Conſtantine, St. Januarius, and St. Ferdinand, ſhould give up their decorations, and every mark of honor which indicated any perſonal ſervice about the perſon of the late King. The ſame miniſter has publiſhed a decree ordering all Calabrians at preſentin Naples, who have not cards of ſafety, to return immediately to their province. Marſhall Maſſena, who is to command the troops deſtined to quell the inſurgents, and to drive the Engliſh out has delayed his departure for ſome days. The laſt accounts from the country, which is the theatre of the inſurrection, ſtate, that the rebels who ſupported the Engliſh have been diſperſed by the French and by the National troops. Great numbers of the Rebels have been killed or made priſoners, and others who had not time to embark, have fled into the woods and mountains.

PAPENBURG.—The town of Papenburg, which has of late been ſo frequently mentioned, and which is not to be found in the books of Geography, is ſituated on the ſouthern frontier of the principality of Eaſt Frieſland, and the northern frontier of the county of Munſter, one mile eaſtward of the Ems, and five from Embden, and conſequently lies, the greateſt part, in the Pruſſian territory, and the ſmalleſt in that of Munſter. It belongs to the Baron of Landſ-berg Veelen. One hundred and twenty four years ago, this spot was a marshy waste. One of the ancestors of the present proprietors resolved to settle a colony there, for the purpose of makeing turf. He accordingly dug a navigable canal from the Ems to the place now called Papenburg, and an abundance of people immediately flocked to inhabit this country. The town contains, at present, two churches, 400 houses, and 3000 souls. It possesses 160 vessels, the largest carrying 160 Casks, and about 100 small craft, which carry turf to East Friesland, Jevere, Bremen, and Hamburgh. There are 19 yards for ship building, in each of which, 12 or 13 carpenters are employed.
